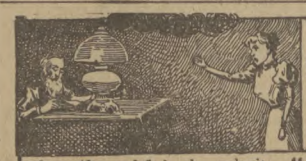
I had supposed that the Honor Roll closed with last week, but a plea has come to insert some other names, so I open it this once. I regret that these names did not come in time to appear upon the Roll itself in my report at the Convention. I will try, however, to add them on my return by inserting in the page plates:

Mrs. Clara S. Wood, Sacramento, Cal....1
Mrs. Willis, Sacramento, Cal.....6
Mrs. L. E. Bailey 2

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

W. C. T. U. Notes.

ONE of the local results of the recent state convention of the W. C. T. U. of Ohio, at Columbus, was the organization of a colored union by Mrs. Lucy Thurman.



THE Harvey, Ill., W. C. T. U. has finished its campaign for new members and has sent its report for the past year to headquarters. The report shows that 92 new members have been added since November 1, 1897. The union now has 171 members.

MINNEAPOLIS W. C. T. U. has wakened from its lethargy. They are to have Mrs. Bullock one week immediately following the Convention, and have pledged financial support for a city missionary. The aim is a membership of 500 by next Convention.

A MEMBER of the local union at Peru, Neb., writes enthusiastically of the work Mrs. Ada Wallace Unruh has been doing in that state. Her lectures were very acceptable, and the women feel greatly encouraged by "this bit of outside inspiration," as the writer aptly expresses it.

THE Central union of Delaware, O., inaugurated a membership contest early in September, which resulted in the acquisition of sixty-five new members. On November 4 a reception was given at the beautiful home of Dr. and Mrs. Bashford when the new members were duly presented to the union by the president, Mrs. Hale, and warmly welcomed to the white-ribbon army by both county and state presidents. The occasion was an unusually pleasant one in every respect.

AT the New York state convention Mrs. Anna M. Kishan's report regarding temperance work in Sunday schools of the state contained some encouraging figures. She appeared wearing a chain of cords representing over a thousand pledges of abstinence from alcohol, tobacco and profanity, and stated that there were 123,000 pledged Sunday-school pupils in the state, and that 134,000 papers on temperance have been distributed among them. Mrs. Metcalf reported for L. T. L. 338 minor Legions, with a membership of 19,654.

FOR YOU

FOR that sour stomach use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they digest the food before it has time to sour, ferment and poison the blood.

FOR loss of appetite, take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because food promptly digested creates a natural desire for MORE.

FOR loss of flesh, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; they increase flesh in the only common sense way, that is, by digesting flesh-forming food, and assisting the weak stomach in disposing of it.

FOR gas in stomach and bowels, causing distress, belching and headaches, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; always indicated in such cases.

FOR palpitation of the heart use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets because this symptom in nine out of ten cases is caused from a disordered stomach.

FOR impure blood use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; pure blood can only result from wholesome food thoroughly digested.

FOR every form of weak digestion and stomach trouble (except cancer of the stomach) Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest, most natural, most successful cure. No patent medicine, but composed of digestive acids, pepsin, bismuth, Golden Seal and similar valuable stomach remedies.

Our Country's New Responsibilities.

CALL FOR A NATIONAL CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP CONVENTION AT WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 13–15, 1898.

Our country has been suddenly called to develop into self-governing citizenship millions of people that have but recently emerged from savagery, and other millions that have been degraded by long-continued oppression. We therefore invite to the above-named convention all Christian citizens, for a conference, with special but not exclusive reference to our new island territories, on the following questions:

Should suffrage be limited by educational tests or otherwise in the new island territories?

Should civil service reform be extended to the new island offices?

Should the national laws for our present territories, requiring scientific temperance education, forbidding prize fights—bull fights also—restricting divorce, and forbidding bigamy and fornication, be extended to our new island territories?

Should the American civil Sabbath be also extended to these islands as essential to the development of safe popular government?

Should our enlarged army, in new dangers in the tropics, be protected there and elsewhere by the suppression of the regimental saloon or "canteen"?

Should the policy of prohibition be maintained in Alaska and the Indian Territory and extended to our new island territories?

The convention will consider also the new obligations that come with our new relations to purify our nation itself in its suffrage, its civil service, its Sabbath, and from those evils that center in the saloon, not for our own sake only, but also for the sake of the world.

The convention is to give special attention to pending moral measures in Congress. Hearings before Congressional committees will be arranged. The call is signed by the following and others:

Josiah Strong, president Society for Social Service, New York.

Anthony Comstock, secretary Society for Prevention of Vice, New York.

Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, W. C. T. U. superintendent Department Scientific Temperance Instruction, Boston.

Mrs. K. L. Stevenson, corresponding secretary National W. C. T. U., Chicago.

Mrs. M. D. Ellis, W. C. T. U. superintendent Department of Christian Citizenship, Newark.

Mrs. V. F. Cox, W. C. T. U. superintendent Sabbath Observance Department.

Mrs. E. M. Thacher, National Supt. W.C.T.U. department of soldiers and sailors, Florence, N. J.

M. D. Kneeland, secretary New England Sabbath Protective League, Boston.

J. B. Davison, secretary Wisconsin Sunday Rest Day Association, Milwaukee.

E. D. Wheelock, president National Christian Citizenship League, Chicago.

Joshua Levering, Hugh Johnston, both of Baltimore, Md.

A New Anti-Canteen Petition.

As it seems unlikely that the President will use his authority to close the regimental saloons, alias "canteens," and as in any case the Ellis bill, favorably reported and pending, will be needed to make such closing permanent and to close the "canteens in soldiers' homes" and the bar in the immigrant station at New York, all the anti-canteen sentiment should now be turned on Congress, and especially on congressmen and senators while they are at home among their constituents, by whom they should be visited, in delegations so far as possible, individually if nothing better can be arranged, to present petitions and ask their active coöperation to pass the Ellis bill early in the coming short session which lasts only from December to March 4. The following petition head is suggested:

To the United States Senate: [Send duplicate to the House:]

"The undersigned earnestly petition you to pass the Ellis bill to forbid liquor selling in 'canteens' of the army and navy and of soldiers' homes, and in immigrant stations and government buildings."

THE London Temperance Hospital, now one of the best equipped in London, may be said to have quite passed the experimental stage of its existence. It has been not only an acknowledged success in itself in the treatment of the diseases common to hospital practice, without recourse to alcohol, but it has by its influence undoubtedly lessened very considerably the use of alcohol in other hospitals. As stated in its last annual report, the hospital was founded in 1873 for the treatment of medical and surgical cases without the use of alcohol as ordinarily prescribed. It was, however, provided that the medical staff should be at liberty to administer alcohol when they deemed this to be needful. During the twenty-four years of the hospital's existence there have been but twenty-five such cases in a total of 13,984 in-patients.—Aaron M. Powell in The National Advocate

Entire Wheat.

Although, strictly speaking, bread is not the "staff of life," it is one of the most important, if not the chiefest article of man's diet. No table is complete without bread in some form, and it is the pride of every housekeeper to have her loaves, her rolls or her biscuit made from the best and the whitest of flour.

The best flour is decidedly essential, but the best flour is not the whitest, notwithstanding the popular idea and prejudice in its favor. Color is sentiment only, which the present generation have been taught to encourage, and long habit has so strengthened this notion that the greatest genius has been called into requisition to cater to the public appetency until almost everything possessing the more vital food properties has been taken from the flour in order to give it the white appearance so longed for.

If, however, bread is to hold its aforesaid relation to the human race as a "prop," it must contain all the elements which feed the life-giving forces of the human body, and these elements are never found in the white, starchy flour which has been robbed of all the strength-supporting and blood-purifying ingredients. The vital elements of the wheat kernel are never white in color, and will not make white flour under any circumstances. When the mind has once been directed into this channel of thought, and the hygienic principles of the wheat kernel fully understood, the current of universal opinion will be changed, and the demand for white flour cease. Baron von Liebig predicted that this excessive starch flour eating would result in disaster to the race, the truth of which is now being plainly seen in many directions in the changes of the types of disease, from strong to weak, in the almost universal exhaustion of the nerve force (which never before in history was so taxed as by the American people), in the great prevalence of nervous diseases, and the sudden breaking down of persons apparently in the full tide of health and vigor. They find it hard to fight the battle of life on only about twenty-five per cent of nerve food.

According to modern chemistry, fifteen or more of the elements found in the human system are also found in a wheat kernel, and in about the same proportion; and these varying elements are not distributed alike throughout the kernel, but are respectively located in different parts of it; the white starchy portion being in the center, while the vital and also darker elements are between this white center and the thin outer husk; these vital elements, those which specially feed the nerve structure, brain, etc., are never white in color, but are always much darker than the interior, and will not make white flour under any conditions. The white color is effected by depriving the flour of the gluten of wheat, and thereby robbing it of most of the nutritious and blood-making qualities.

Flour of the entire wheat contains all the nutrient properties of wheat, and is not an impoverished food. It is best adapted for digestion and assimilation because of its even fineness. Every perfect grain of wheat is a marvel of perfection in its construction. The outer husk has several layers of ligneous tissue, very hard in texture, which covers the farinaceous portion, and which, when ground in our modern mills, is reduced to what is known as bran. The inner portion of the envelope contains an active principle known as cerealin, which is rich in fat and salts. In the ordinary milling, this portion finds its place with the coarser residuum in the sifting processes. It is claimed by the best authorities on health foods, that the product of the entire wheat contains every constituent for building up the healthy man with perfect completeness of bone, muscle, brain and nerve.

If, therefore, you value your health and that of your children, always buy your flour with the fullest possible knowledge of its value for what you want of it—i. e., FOOD. The real question to be considered is, Which has the most and highest nutritive value, and will make the most pounds of bread, and not which is the whitest or lowest in price?—Exchange.

Publisher's Notes.

The Frances Townsley Calendar for 1899 will be ready early in November. It is composed of a sentiment for each day in the coming year, the material being garnered by the request of friends from Rev. Miss Townsley's sermons, lectures, and addresses, with a few entire poems of the author published in such standard publications as The Youth's Companion, the New York Independent, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Baptist Standard, etc. Miss Townsley is a National evangelist of the W. C. T. U. and at present is pastor of the Baptist church, of Vassar, Mich. The calendar is gotten up on neat paper with clear type, arranged for daily use, and the proceeds are to be devoted to Christian and reform work. There are many suggestions to young men and maidens; some to the aged; and not a few have felt that the preparation of this souvenir might be a means of real good to those who shall own a copy. It is expressly suitable as a Christmas gift. For terms address

REV. FRANCES E. TOWNSLEY,
Vassar, Mich.

The Bible Reading for December considers the question of "Woman's Right to Prophesy," and is written by the Rev. Edith Hill-Booker, one of our National evangelists. The subject is discussed under five heads, viz.: 1. The fundamental idea of prophecy; 2. Woman's right foretold; 3. Her right exercised; 4. Examples; 5. Apparent prohibitions; and concludes with the significant passage from Psalms 68: 11 (R. V.): "The Lord giveth the word, the women that publish the tidings are a great host."

Price, single copies per year, $.12. Ten copies per year to one address, $1.

In the Responsive Readings for the month of December Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake talks about rescue work. She tells how it came to be a part of W. C. T. U. effort, and briefly outlines the history of the department. She suggests practical methods of work for local unions, emphasizing particularly its preventive features.

Price, single copies per year, $.10. Thirteen copies per year to one address, $1.

Our friends who order small amounts of literature, promising to remit by return mail, often stating they do not know the price, etc., can not understand the annoyance of carrying these small memorandum accounts or they would be more prompt in remitting.

The Home.

No Rest for the Mother.

There has been a good deal written about mothers—their goodness, their patience and their influence. Perhaps it would be a good plan to write a few lines about how to keep the mothers longer out of heaven and longer in the home. To the ordinary mothers—no, there are no ordinary mothers, they are all extraordinary in their particular homes—holidays come rarely. Mary has a party and mother makes a cake. Tom goes fishing and she puts up a lunch. Even the husband takes a day off, but the kitchen fire is kept burning. It is the mother who "stays by the stuff," and in hot weather she is much like Casabianca on the burning deck—no one comes to the rescue.

Now, young people, you love your mothers. You are only thoughtless. You have so long lived in the light of a mother's smile that you have not thought it could grow dim and flicker and go out forever for you. She has made every one so comfortable so many years with the ministrations of her deft hands, that apparently there has been no need of any outside help.

Let us take a look at those hands! The wedding ring is worn thin; it slips about on her finger. I think the finger must have been quite white and soft when it was first put on. What makes those joints so large, so out of proportion to the fingers? They came so gradually, not in a day, but after many whole days, in fact whole years of hard labor. She did not think about her hands, or try to save them, or feel sad about their looks. It was always her husband's, or Mary's, or Tom's comfort she was thinking about. It seems to me, as she turns to go out of the room, that she is round-shouldered and bends over. I think when she was a bride she was tall and straight. I wonder what would happen if you young people should all look at your mothers with seeing eyes as we have looked at the mother of Mary and Tom. If you rub them a little with the oil of love and unselfishness, perhaps you will even see more than I have suggested.

See that your mother takes a needed rest before she is called to her long, last one. It may add years to her life. Try if the combined efforts of the family in some little sacrifice will not put it in her power to go away on a visit for a month. If you can't work, it will be a good time for you to learn. If you miss her a good deal, you will begin to appreciate a very little what her work for you has been. It will be better to give her up a short time now, than to lose her forever for lack of a little vacation.

More "Backbone."

THE story is told of "Long John" Wentworth that when he went into a Chicago prayer-meeting during the war he prayed that God should give President Lincoln more "backbone." Such a petition to-day voices the need of the age in relation to the drink canteen in the army. President Lincoln showed that he had "backbone" when he penned the proclamation of emancipation. Oh, for a proclamation of emancipation from the drink canteen.—The National Advocate.

To White-Ribboners Everywhere.

ON Monday, November 14, at the National Convention in St. Paul, Minn., the report of the Temple was received through the president of its board, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse. Following that was a discussion in regard to continuing it as an affiliated interest, which lasted from two o'clock until eight P. M., the particulars of which will appear in the Convention number of THE UNION SIGNAL, December 1. All that we wish to say now is, that after the fullest and freest expression of facts, opinions and appeals from those who were for and those who were against dropping the Temple, a vote was taken by the yeas and nays, and each woman as her name was called stood and answered "yes" or "no" according to her convictions. The result was 285 against continuing it as an affiliated interest and 71 for continuing it. The afternoon of the following day was given largely to a resolution offered by Mrs. Dunham, of Iowa, pledging the National to help pay off the $300,000 Temple Trust Bonds issued by Mrs. Carse. Full and free discussion was again accorded to all, and the vote stood 267 against to 76 for. These votes, after every phase of the financial condition of the Temple and the legal and moral status of the National union toward the enterprise had been presented, settled the question of our relation to the Temple once for all.

The resolutions which brought these questions before the Convention are to be found on page 2 of this issue. We believe that every white-ribboner will cheerfully accept the result given by these large majority votes, and we ask each and every one of them to read carefully the report of the whole question as it will appear in the Convention record, and if fuller information is then desired it can be obtained by addressing the National Headquarters. It was Mrs. Carse's announced intention to use her column in this issue in saying farewell to the women to whom she has so long spoken through this medium, but as plans and appeals for the Temple could not now be promulgated in the National organ, she declined to make any communication whatever.

We wish at this early moment to emphasize the action of the Convention in making February 17 (Miss Willard's "heavenly birthday") a memorial day throughout the unions. At the meetings held upon that date it is expected that her life, her works, her principles, her character, will be reviewed and thus her influence be kept alive in the hearts of the people and transmitted to coming generations. It is also provided that each union is invited to send to the National treasury upon that day, two dollars as a voluntary gift to what is to be known as the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund, the same to be used for the extension and perpetuation of the work to which she consecrated her great life. When our ten thousand unions realize what this means, that evangelists, organizers and superintendents could then reach weak points and new fields that are now appealing for aid, they will also realize that by this simple method they can build a fitting monument to our great departed leader. To double our membership, to strengthen and solidify the organization built by her upon the great fundamental principles of total abstinence, prohibition and purity would indeed be a fitting memorial to her. That this will be done is argued by the Crusade spirit that burned during the Convention, and by the spirit of charity and Christian forbearance manifested throughout the most trying moments of all our deliberations. We can truly say that notwithstanding the grave issues that were before us, and the great sorrow which has come to us in the loss of our beloved leader, yet our hearts are fixed, our aims are one, our hopes are high, and we count every white-ribboner as one in love and one in purpose.

Yours to serve,

LILLIAN M. N. STEVENS, Pres.

SUSANNA M. D. FRY, Cor. Sec.

Memorial Convention Life Membership.

THE National Convention just closed was a significant and a memorable one of which we will have more to say later on. There is every evidence to believe that the future of our organization will be as greatly blessed of God as has been the past, and that its next decade will be marked by a grand increase of membership as well as by a strengthening of the principles for which the society came into being. The members seem to have received at this memorial Convention a baptism of the Crusade spirit and they have gone forth with renewed faith and courage along all lines. We believe it will prove to be no injury that the National W. C. T. U. felt obliged, after eleven years of heroic struggle, to discontinue the Temple as an affiliated interest. A marked feature of the Convention was inaugurated by Miss Anna Gordon when she spoke feelingly of Mother Thompson, of Hillsboro, O., and made her a life member of the National W. C. T. U., at this its Crusade anniversary. She was quickly followed by Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, who made Mother Stewart, of Springfield, O., a life member. Mrs. Hoffman did the same for Mother Wallace, and others followed in quick succession until there are now fifty-one. The father and mother of Miss Willard were made memorial members. It is believed that many more will be named by their friends. The thought is that all who come into life membership by the payment of twenty-five dollars at any time during this the twenty-fifth year of the organization, shall be called Memorial Convention Life Members, and we believe that a silver offering for five hundred life members may thus come in to furnish the sinews of our peaceful war.

The Stockholders' Meeting.

THE adjourned meeting of the stockholders of the W. T. P. A. was held November 18, at the Temple. A large number of stockholders from the East stopped over en route from the Convention, and the representation was larger than usual. Mrs. Carse declined to allow her name to be considered as director, and the vote for the board of directors resulted as follows: Mesdames Hannah J. Bailey, L. M. N. Stevens, Clara C. Hoffman, L. A. Hagans, Marion H. Dunham, L. S. Rounds, Evalyn Graham, Gage Cutter, Lucie B. Tyng, Helen M. Barker and Miss Anna Gordon. Mrs. Carse was presented with beautiful flowers in appreciation of her faithful work for the association.

In the afternoon the directors held a meeting at which the following officers were elected: President, Hannah J. Bailey; secretary, Helen M. Barker; assistant secretary, L. S. Rounds; treasurer, L. A. Hagans. Caroline F. Grow was re-elected business manager; Clara C. Chapin, managing editor of THE UNION SIGNAL; Carrie T. Jewett, associate editor; Lady Henry Somerset, corresponding editor; Mrs. Fry, Mrs. Stevenson and Mrs. Isabella Parks, contributing editors. Miss Ruby Gilbert was re-elected bookkeeper and cashier. The reports of president, business manager and editors were very encouraging.

Convention News.

Mrs. Stevens Elected President.

A By-law Amended and Miss Anna Gordon Named as Vice President at Large.

FOR the second time in its history the National W. C. T. U. has been called upon to elect a new president, and one of the saddest hours of the twenty-fifth annual Convention was that named for the election of officers.

Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens received 317 of the 356 votes cast on the informal ballot. The secretary was instructed to cast the ballot and Mrs. Stevens was declared elected. She was deeply affected by the vote, and in acknowledging the honor conferred upon her, said:

I know it was hard for you to write the name of any other on your ballots than the name you have written for nineteen years—your joy, your love, your hope, your inspiration in the work. How much harder it is for me to stand here and try to accept her place! For twenty-four years I worked with Miss Willard and never dreamed she would go and leave me to act. When she went I did not know how to go on. I don't know what to say or how to thank you, but did I not believe she still lives I couldn't stand beside that empty chair. Let us not say her mantle has fallen on me, but on all of us. Let us strive above all things else to extend the work to which she consecrated her life. I shall try to serve you in the name of our Lord.

A by-law having provided that state presidents only should be eligible to the office of vice-president-at-large, Mrs. Stevens, in conformity with Miss Willard's expressed desire, asked that it be amended so that she could appoint Anna A. Gordon to the office named. The amendment was immediately passed and Miss Gordon's appointment unanimously ratified by the Convention.

Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson having resigned as corresponding secretary, Mrs. S. M. D. Fry, of Minnesota, managing editor of THE UNION SIGNAL for the past three years, was elected to that office. The remaining members of the board of National officers were all re-elected: Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, of Missouri, recording secretary; Mrs. Frances Beauchamp, of Kentucky, assistant recording secretary, and Mrs. Helen M. Barker, of Illinois, treasurer.

Clara Parrish Honored.

GENERAL satisfaction will be expressed by the Y's of this country over the appointment by the National executive committee of Miss Clara Parrish, of Paris, Ill., at present a round-the-world missionary, to be general secretary of the Y Branch for the National W. C. T. U. Miss Parrish has greatly endeared herself to the young women of the world who claim her as peculiarly their own, and the effective work she has done in Japan during the past two years is evidence of her fitness for the high position to which she has now been called. She is at present in Burmah, India, but will return to America in the course of a few months.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, who was elected last year to succeed Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, as National Y secretary, was unexpectedly called to the presidency of New York state by the death of Mary Towne Burt. The extensive interests of that state, therefore, have first claim upon her time and abilities, but she will remain acting secretary of the Y's until such time as Miss Parrish can return and relieve her.

The Temple Resolutions.

THE resolution offered by Mrs. Hoffman which resulted in dropping the Temple by the Convention was as follows:

Resolved, That in view of the fuller light regarding financial conditions and limitations of the Temple enterprise, we recommend that the Temple be discontinued as an affiliated interest of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

The yeas and nays were called, and it was adopted by a vote of 285 to 71. A rising vote was taken the following day on Mrs. Dunham's resolution, which read thus:

Resolved, That in view of the hearty indorsement given by the National Convention in Boston in 1891 to the Temple Trust Bonds, that indorsement having decided many to purchase the bonds, and that the moral obligations thus incurred by the National union toward the bondholders has been acknowledged again and again, we hereby pledge our coöperation to the Board of Temple Trustees in the retirement of the Temple Trust Bonds.

The vote stood 267 against, 76 for. Another resolution offered by Mrs. Hoffman and passed without a dissenting voice was the following:

Resolved, That our sincere appreciation be extended to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the founder of the Temple, for the brave effort she has made to secure for the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union the building which she has always believed would be a source of a large revenue for the carrying on of the work, and that we are convinced that but for the untoward circumstances which it was impossible for any one to foresee, the status of the building would be very different to-day.

Notes.

THE flowers from Miss Willard's chair were sent to the St. Paul hospitals each night, as gifts of memory for her.

CORDIAL invitations for the next National Convention were received from Portland, Ore., Portland, Me., Los Angeles, Cal., and Seattle, Wash.

HEREAFTER the week following Easter will be observed by the National W. C. T. U. as a week of prayer for the preservation and better observance of the Sabbath.

ONE hundred and fifty new members were added to the W. C. T. U. during the Convention. Two new unions were organized in St. Paul and one L. T. L. arranged for.

NEW YORK state got the Y banner for the greatest increase in paid membership, 225; the bannerette for the greatest increase in per cent of membership went to Indiana, they having reported a gain of 200 per cent.

MRS. MABEL L. CONKLIN, general secretary of the White Cross movement, addressed a large audience of young men, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. of St. Paul, at the House of Hope church on Sunday afternoon.

THE present address of Mrs. Martha M. Allen, National superintendent of non-alcoholic medication, is 809 South Geddes street, Syracuse, N. Y., instead of Newark, N. Y. Local superintendents will please note this fact.

THE prizes for the Honor Roll—the memorial etching of Miss Willard—were given to Mrs. Mabel L. Conklin, Brooklyn, N. Y., and Mrs. Helen D. Harford, of Oregon, who secured the largest increase in membership, averaging about 1,000 each.

A LARGE crayon portrait of Miss Willard, which occupied a conspicuous place on the Convention platform, was presented to the National W. C. T. U. by Mrs. Ella A. Boole for the artist, Mrs. A. W. Stocking, of New York. Mrs. Stevens accepted it for the union.

OF the three banners offered by Miss Willard last year for the greatest increase in district, county and local unions, the first two went to Kansas, the sixth district of that state having added 300 to its roll, and Osborne county reported an increase of 250 per cent. The local union banner went to Harvey, Ill., for an increase of ninety-two members.

MISS ELIZABETH GREENWOOD, of New York city, superintendent of the department of evangelistic work, stated in her report that the work in the department has been unusually heavy during the past year, owing to the war. Throughout the country 50,000 Bibles and Testaments were distributed during the year among the volunteers and regulars of the army.

"PHYSICAL Development and the Temperance Reform" was the subject of a short and interesting address by Miss Mary A. Blood, principal of the Columbia School of Oratory, Chicago, on Y night. Miss Blood also had charge of the brief intermissions, or "breathing spells" of the various sessions of the Convention, when the tediousness of sitting was relieved by short physical culture exercises.

FORTY states were represented on the National executive committee at St. Paul, thirty-eight by their state presidents, which is the largest number of vice-presidents ever in attendance at a National Convention. The roll-call by the recording secretary showed one hundred and fifty-four ex-officio members present, which also is the largest number in attendance at any previous Convention. The total number of delegates reported by the committee on credentials was three hundred and seventy-one.

No less than fifty-one memorial Convention life members were added to our organization during Convention week. As the fee for such membership is twenty-five dollars, this means an addition of $1,275 to the treasury of the National W. C. T. U. to carry on white-ribbon work.

SATURDAY evening is always Y night at National Conventions, and the young women will be gratified to know that the National executive has decided to hold no more committee meetings on that evening in order that there may be undivided attention given to the exercises of the Y's.

ONE of the recommendations of the executive committee was that February 17, the date of Miss Willard's death, be made a memorial day by all the unions of the world, and that on each succeeding memorial day every union contribute the sum of two dollars to a fund to be known as the Frances E. Willard memorial fund, to be devoted to the furtherance of the work of the union in all its departments and branches. Such contributions will be entirely voluntary.

AT the annual convention of the New York State Woman Suffrage Association, held in Hudson, November 9 and 10, the following resolution of respect and sympathy was passed:

Resolved, That we express our heartfelt sorrow at the untimely passing away of Miss Frances E. Willard, a native of this state, whose last days were passed here, realizing that when her noble life closed, we lost not only a leader for morality, but one who was also an earnest advocate for woman suffrage.

We also wish to make loving mention of the death of Mrs. Mary T. Burt, and extend our sympathy to the great organization of New York women who lost in her a long tried and faithful president.

THE Children's Hour, on the closing evening of the Convention was a great success, hundreds of people being unable to gain admission to the building. The exercises were in charge of Mrs. Helen G. Rice, National superintendent of the L. T. L. work, and Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, of the Sunday-school department. The fine program rendered was arranged by Miss Anna Gordon, World's superintendent of the L. T. L. work, and was almost entirely made up of recitations, songs and quotations from Miss Willard's writings, and the tributes of loving friends to her memory.

ABOUT fifty delegates to the Convention who passed through Chicago on their way to their homes, made a pilgrimage to Rest Cottage and to Miss Willard's grave at Rose Hill on Friday, November 18. Two beautiful wreaths of leaves had been sent from Vermont, one from a tree planted by Miss Willard at the birthplace of Madam Willard, in Danville, the other from Wheelock, where Miss Willard's father was born, and were laid upon the grave by Mrs. Ida Read, state president of Vermont. Nearly all of the visitors carried flowers and brief informal exercises were held.

AMONG the addresses of welcome to the Convention was one by A. W. Guthridge, president of the Catholic Temperance Federation, who spoke in behalf of the Catholic temperance societies. He said:

I bring to you from the Catholic Temperance Union a message of love. We are interested in all that you do and we wish for a closer union. We have allied in Catholic total abstinence societies 7,000 persons, one-fifth of whom are in this city. The men welcome you and the women welcome you. The women are proud of your success and for the very good consequences to their homes on account of your crusade against the saloon. We believe that total abstinence alone is the cure for the intemperance and poverty evils. I have no desire to criticise our forefathers. I do not criticise anybody for their love of God, but to go on in the present way is extreme foolishness. We must have union. We ask a closer union with you.

Y CONFERENCES were held every day at one o'clock and were unusually helpful and suggestive. Twenty states were represented either by their secretaries or delegates. Plans of work for the coming year were outlined which, it is hoped, will add materially to the strength of the Y Branch. All the foreign missionary funds, with the exception of that set apart for Clara Parrish, were consolidated and Miss Lillian M. Herr, of Norwich, Conn., appointed custodian. It was recommended that a World's missionary meeting be held during the year when this fund will be disbursed according to the needs of the different countries. Two new Y unions were organized in St. Paul, and every college in the Twin Cities, St. Paul and Minneapolis, was visited by Y workers, as well as many of the high schools.

Conflict.

BY JULIA MOODY KLINCK.

BODY:
Soul, why wilt thou not at rest
Dwell content within my breast?
Love and wealth are at my feet,
Hope is strong and life is sweet.

SOUL:
Ask the bird on quivering wing
Prone unto the earth to cling;
Ask it not at heaven's gate
With its rapturous song to wait,
But to hush its yearning note
Alll unuttered in its throat!
When it thus content shall bide,
Then may I be satisfied.

BODY:
Soul, why for the future groan,
When the present is thine own?
Why leave all a kind world's weal
For a far-off, vague ideal?

SOUL:
Once within its life,—of snow
Weary doth the reindeer grow;—
Lifts his head and scents the sea;
Then, determined to be free,
Breaks all bonds and speeds away,
And no hand hath power to stay
His swift strides, until that he
Tastes at last the deep salt sea.
So with hind'ring things at strife
Yearn I for the better life.

BODY:
Soul, then must thou, soon or late,
Yield thee to thy future fate.
How—all earthly good denied—
Canst thou e'er be satisfied?

SOUL:
Hast thou not upon the lake
Seen the mirrored heavens break?
Tinted clouds and sparkling skies,
Or the nights' unnumbered eyes
Looking down to break the spell
Peace hath woven deep and well?

So, sometimes with wondrous light
Heaven breaketh on my sight.
'Tis the exile's glimpse of home!
There his best affections roam,
Where the heir's possessions lie
Gladly would he occupy.

So on quiv'ring wing I wait
Till afar at heaven's gate
Rings my song, triumphant, clear,
Which is all unuttered here.
So would I break ev'ry spell
Which the world weaves deep and well
Ev'ry bond of sin; and free
Taste a long eternity.

Body, thou shalt not for long
Clip my wings and hush my song.
Sometime shall I break away
From my prison house of clay,
And no more with sin at strife
Find the perfect endless life.

An Open Secret.

BY JULIA NEELY-FINCH.

IT was a little brown-eyed woman, with a wealth of sunny hair thrust carelessly away from an open brow, who said, regarding me curiously: "I wish you would tell me something, and please don't think me impertinent for asking—how is it, that you, who have so little to make you so, seem always so content, while I, to whom the lines of life have fallen in such pleasant places, have such a bored—" and here she fell to preening her pretty draperies, as does a bird its plumage, glancing now and again at an oval mirror that swung just at a convenient angle—"and fretful look? Tell me, I pray you. Now, your hair is white and your face lined in many places with the sorrow that I know, dear,"—and now her soft, bejeweled hand stole gently into mine so seamed and worn, and a world of tenderness beamed on me from her sweet eyes, for I had known and loved her since she lay a tiny mass of pink flesh and long draperies in her mother's arms—"and yet," she continued, "in your eyes there is a look of placid content, and your lips are more given to smiling than are my own. Will you, or rather can you, tell me your secret?"

I held the little hand, so soft and white in my own, and looked into her young eyes, so tender, so true; and then I looked more closely at her face. I discovered two tiny vertical lines dividing the fair brow, and saw, too, that the corners of her mouth, instead of curving upward as they should, dropped, making an unbecoming line across her fair face. I will confess I was astonished; for the child had seemed so blest in my eyes, being the adored wife of a man of wealth and social position—that I did not really know of a single "crumpled rose leaf" of which she might complain; and I suppose I had just taken her happiness for granted.

"Tell you my secret, dearie? Have I a secret? Suppose I tell you a little bit of my life instead, how will that do?"

"Anything will do that will teach me a lesson, now, while I am young and should be so happy."

"Well! I'll tell you of a girl with wonderful will-power, inexhaustible ambition, and a firm resolve to gather the world into her two hands, to mould at her sweet will and pleasure. Sufficient unto herself was this girl, and never was her knee bent in prayer, nor did her lips ask advice of those older and wiser than herself. No, she believed that God had endowed her with brains that the world might be her slave; nor did she think even to thank that One who had endowed her with superb health, a sufficient amount of sense to appreciate, and who had placed her in an atmosphere of tenderest love and consideration; who had garnered His sunshine that it might fall on her pathway, and made her life all golden days and happy ways. No, firmly and proudly the girl went her way. She married to suit herself, and she lived after a pattern of her own short-sighted devising. Careless of the world, indifferent to friends, scoffing at the sweet interdependence of mutual forbearance, caring alone for that which contributed to self, and which glorified the same unworthy idol.

"Time went on. God had not forgotten His wayward one though she had forgotten Him. A little babe came to her. Did she look upon it as a beautiful link leading to the world above? No, 'twas only another tribute to self—my baby, not God's little one, to be reared in His loving fear. And so God saw this poor, misguided girl was not fit to be a mother, not worthy the charge of an immortal soul, and one day the little face grew pale and still, the soft eyes no more raised their white lids. Baby's body was there, fair and beautiful, but God's spark of immortality had returned to its great primal source.

"How did grief affect the poor, unfortunate girl of whom I am telling you? It made her heart a stone. Instead of smiling now, she laughed. Out into the world she rushed, to seek that happiness denied her at her own hearthstone. She became a giddy, silly-appearing creature of whom I dislike to think. Into the whirl of life she threw herself, and wealth and position all rendered tribute, that she might waste that most precious thing on earth—time.

"And still God loved her, and thought her worthy redemption. So, wealth fell away from her, and as a consequence, those friends who are but sunny-day friends, and the poor girl was left alone with a few plain, homely friends, at whom she had scarcely deigned to glance in the days of her prosperity. And was she softened now? No, she locked all her heart-burnings and heart-achings up in her breast, and went about with a cold, proud, even disdainful face. 'Let the world's scorn come,' little cared she. Her fortune lay in her own good strength and her ten capable fingers and the brain in her head. And I can imagine how sorry the good God was to still punish this wayward one, and how He grieved over her. But He loved her too well to lose her, and so one day she fell ill.

"Imagine it. In His mercy God had sent three other little human buds to bloom fragrantly on her unworthy bosom; and here they were clinging about her, their lips pale with hunger, their sweet, tender eyes beseeching 'mother' for food (for I must tell you, dear, this creature of her own undoing, had one redeeming trait, she was a devoted mother); and one, the tiniest of all, clung to her poor, parched breast, until it seemed her very blood must leave its wonted channels and serve the little clinging lips as nourishment.

"Oh, but that was a bitter time; but 'tis all past now, dearie, so don't spoil those sweet eyes of yours with unavailing tears. Unworthy as I was (for of course you know it is of myself I am telling you) God had His everlasting arms under me, babies and all, and help came, but not too soon for the good work to have been done. The proud spirit bent in humble prayer for aid and in thus praying, to have acknowledged its insufficiency into itself.

"My beautiful home had been taken from me, and I had sought shelter in an upstairs flat, there being beneath me wholesale stores. And now, you will believe with me, that the angel of deliverance waited near me with folded wings and ear inclined, that it might hear the first whisper of tender penitence, when I tell you how it was that help came to me. Despairing as I was, I dragged myself from my bed, and gathering my little ones about me, prayed aloud for help. Abandoning all my pride, my simulated coldness, my scorn of all that was soft and appealing, I bowed myself in the midst of those little innocent faces, pale for want of food, but full of trust that somehow 'mother' would make everything all right again, and aloud I called on the God of the fatherless for aid. I confessed myself unto Him as the great High Priest, and sweet, gentle tears streamed down my face as I prayed, and a spirit of trust that help would come, and speedily, overflowed my poor, broken heart. Nor was I surprised to hear a gentle tap at the door, nor to see two Sisters of Charity—blessed angels of comfort—enter. One a little, rosy-faced and placid creature, was spokeswoman.

"'We were visiting one of our sick, in the next room to this, and we heard your prayer. The walls are very thin, you know—('Thank God!' I whispered, I was too weak to do more) and so—give me the baby, dear, I'll hold him while you get back to bed. Oh, Sister Agatha! be sure and get'—but 'Sister Agatha' had gone scuttling down the bare corridor, her long, black mantle flying behind her like a dusky cloud, so fast did she walk.

"They fed me and my little ones until strength came back to me; they nourished my starved soul with tender counsel, as they did my perishing body with wholesome food; and the very happiest two weeks of my life was spent under their roof, a guest of charity. Nor did I scruple to accept humbly and prayerfully, what the Lord had sent. Nor have the dark days come back, and so, peace being in my heart, dear, it must needs shine out on my plain, old face. All is well with me and mine, and I am well content to wait the good pleasure of that God who befriended me in my darkest hour.

"There, dear, is my secret. Yours is too much ease of mind and body. Go out of yourself. Do for others a little part of what God has done for you. Give, not alone of your riches, but of yourself; of the bright, sweet glances of those tender eyes of yours; of cheery, kindly words. Do the little things that so many forget. The lower and humbler the one you benefit the greater will be the blessing to yourself. Each morning when you awake, think not, 'What can I do to be happy?' but, 'What can I do to make others happy?' And, believe me, dear, peace will nestle like a dove at your heart, and gentle content will smooth those wrinkles from that young brow, and lasting joy will upcurve the red petal of your mouth, and your mirror will tell you happy tales at every glance!"

The Iron Man.

An Allegory.

BY MARY H. HULL.

AT the top of a stairway which led down into unknown and unseen abysses, I stood watching masses of ignorance and poverty roll like clouds over and against each other and at the sides of my footing concealing the bottom from view. Seething masses of heads and arms and legs protruded from these clouds and reached to me with longing looks and pleading hands as I tried my utmost but could not reach them. On and on they kept passing by. I could sometimes almost touch their hands, but when I did and had to fail the agony was greater still.

I kept on trying and trying to pluck some one out of this condition and finally succeeded in landing one poor little mortal on my mortal shore, but oh, the wailing nakedness of the child as it lay at my feet without mother and father and the brothers and sisters who were determined to follow but could not! I turned my efforts toward the rescued one, but in attempting to take it somewhere my foot slipped and I fell down several steps and the child with me. I could not move but finally pushed it up quite a distance and called repeatedly for help, but no one answered.

At last the little one became wearied out with crying and fell asleep on this dangerous and slippery place, and for some strange reason I also slept while watching, and awoke to find myself further down the stairway, where only the thickest darkness was about me. I moved a little and stood upon a solid floor with walls each side close to me. I was in a kind of narrow passage way, and wondered if it was a grave, but away at the top there seemed to be a tiny line of light. One thing I was thankful for and that was that I was all alone and saw nobody suffering.

I could not find the stairway and wondered which way next. I found I could only go ahead for behind me the way seemed to close as fast as I pressed on. I could not rise for I had no means—no ropes, nor niches, nor stairs. I felt only smooth walls. At last it seemed that there was a slight up-grade to my floor and that the line of light at the top was growing a little wider. This gave me great courage and I almost ran. But I found that if I did that I seemed to get into a very tight place.

"O God," I cried, "lead me, for surely my power is helpless." I then remembered the Book said, "It is not in man that walketh to guide his steps," and I thought, God knows I have been very wise in my own conceits. I have thought I could help the poor and the suffering; I have not remembered there is no redeeming power in dust. I have labored foolishly. Jesus Christ preached deliverance and good news to the poor; the deaf heard and the lame walked and captivity was led captive, but "not by might nor by power," but 'twas "by my spirit." Spirit is the only power. If Christ be not risen within me, my faith is vain, my work is vain; which means, that if Christ is risen in me then nothing is in vain nor impossible. He is the Captain. He did not save by having this man and that spend millions of material dollars for the poor. He did not save by money, nor means, nor by any earthly power.

Then I saw the walls of my prison fall away and found I was abroad in daylight. My joy was unutterable, for it was peace. Many friends, (especially dear was the little one I had lost on the stairway) seemed to come to me and partake of that peace. Day by day I stood and fed my love and joy and life to people, when behold! I saw another sorrow, yet it was not sorrow, for I held my peace and place.

At the door of this dreadful pit I saw two of my older sisters and my great strong brother with them, endeavoring to save by might and power a suffering brother at work in the pit. He was chained there and with a pickax was made to dig and hew out this dreadful stairway leading downward into the bowels of the earth. They beckoned to him to come up and see them and be more cheerful. They sang beautiful hymns to him, piped great organ solos for him, and threw him food and clothing, but the man could not eat nor scarcely see, so tired was he of his work. Other brothers and sisters were chained to the same spot, and little children, too, who had no work, but all were starving and begging together. At last my sisters and the great strong man went down the steps to stay with our brother in his misery. I then remembered my experience, and went to save them from the mistake I had made, when lo! the horror that I saw before me is almost too dreadful to relate.

The man with the pickax had dealt my handsome brother such a blow that he lay stunned and helpless. Although he had money he had no muscle nor had he any weapon. He feebly beckoned to my sisters to help him out of this place, when the infuriated and wasted skeleton of a man, with eyes so hollow that a light shone from behind them, attacked my sisters also. Like iron and steel his whole body seemed to be riveted together, and he grew taller and mightier as he twirled and twirled around together on his ax handle which grew to be a mighty spear these women and this man. Round and round they whirled until I could not distinguish one from the other, and could only see this mighty and enraged laboring man, whose muscle from the time of Adam down to the present had taken on an iron strength. He flung them finally into a corner and then pulling from his emaciated breast, covered with only a thin bit of clothing, a great long knife, with it finished the work of death upon my loving and well meaning sisters and brother and then upon himself. My head grew dizzy at the sight and many times I felt I must take a hand in the combat, but I remembered there was only one way out of that pit and that was through death, hence I staid upon my little shore of life and prayed and remembered "Christ is risen."

After all was over I looked to see what next. And then I heard this said, "Work, work, my daughter of Zion, but work in the joy of my spirit; not by might nor by power which lies so helplessly before you, but by spirit, by spirit."

As it was so whispered in my ear I saw the black clouds of ignorance and poverty had changed and seemed to be like golden chariots loaded with joy and knowledge. All things were glorified in a knowledge of the Lord's presence. Even the stairway and the pit and the dead bodies changed into life and light and life again, not through death, but because all things lost each its own poor little life and might and power in the All-Power, Spirit.

The Question of Life and Death to Nations.

BY WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

MUST every nation, must our own, grow old and die? Nay, for in the very nature of the case, a nation may be immortal like a river, its drops ever passing on to the sea, but ever renewed from its mountain springs. If we maintain the Christian morality and popular education, which Washington declared to be the high sources of national prosperity, and keep unbroken on either hand the banks of liberty and law, our nation's life may go on ceaselessly.

But eternal life to a nation can come only through "eternal vigilance." Many who firmly believe nature goes by law, act as if history went by luck. As surely as effect follows cause Babylonian vices will produce a Babylonian fall.

Babylon, Greece, Rome, the renaissance kingdoms of Italy and France, form a national series, all showing that the highest art, if it be mental culture without moral, if it be the art whose motto is "art for art's sake," the godless estheticism of nude art, that puts beauty in the supreme place instead of duty, not only can not take the place of religion in checking immorality, but ever increases it, dragging the nation down the three steps to national ruin; first, moral, second, physical, third, political decay. France is on the second step, the only civilized land in which the birth rate is falling below the death rate, a blazing warning on the walls of this modern Babylon of the retribution to men and nations that follows the violation of the fourth and seventh commandments.

Why should we cast aside our Anglo-Saxon traditions to welcome the nude to our literature and homes, when every nation from which we have borrowed it is either dead or dying? Since France is dying of the worst of plagues, French pictures, French plays and French novels should be quarantined like ships from infected ports.

The problem of purity is the question of life or death to nations. As we look through history we see that nations have died chiefly of internal causes, not of free silver or free trade, but free love. Therefore, moral questions should be the supreme questions in politics, those that conform to Gladstone's definition of the purpose of law—"to make it as hard as possible to do wrong and as easy as possible to do right."

THE reward of one duty is the power to fulfill another.—George Eliot.

A Parable.

BY ELTWEED POMEROY.

A CERTAIN very rich man said unto himself: "I have many interests and I will turn over the most important of them to a body of men whom I'll choose for a year or two years, and I'll call them a legislature." And he did it and went on his way. And the body of men met and they made money with the rich man's goods and sold some and mortgaged others and despoiled others. And the sutlers and lobbyists flocked around as vultures around a carrion, and the rich man remonstrated and held mass-meetings and screamed himself hoarse. And the body of men looked at him derisively and said to itself: "Surely we have worked for these offices, and they are ours, and you can't put us out, nor reverse our acts, but are bound by them," and they laughed in their sleeves at the rich man.

Again, an election came around and the rich man chose another set of men of the same sort, and having untrammeled power. They did likewise. And many moons waxed and waned and the rich man did not seem to learn by experience, but really he was growing very angry, and at last he rose up and said: "I will choose you as councilors, but you shall do naught that I do not wish, and you shall do the things I wish, and I'll veto any acts of yours that I do not like by the referendum, and if you will not pass the laws I wish, I myself will start them by the initiative." And the latter end of that man was better than the former.

Willard Hall Echoes.

FRANCES E. WILLARD has beautifully written:

"Dear friends,

" 'Your bark is wafted to the strand by breath Divine;
And on the helm there rests a Hand other than mine,' other than yours, that steadfast, loving hand of Him whose hand was pierced for you and for me, who shall one day hold the seepter of the world, who cared not for Himself, but whose very prayer was for us all. There is no 'I' in the Lord's Prayer, it is all 'we'; it is all the brotherhood of man and fatherhood of God."

The lectures and talks in Willard Hall point in no uncertain manner to this truth.

Tenderness, remorse for wasted years, intense yearning for souls saved from sin, are expressed in every sentence. We would tell of prayers yet unanswered. For a man who does not drink now but is so cruel to his invalid wife; for a woman who is profane; for a loved one in great temptation that he may become strong enough to resist; for a boy pushed out of his home into the world; for a soldier just returned that he may enter the right kind of business and become a Christian.

A young man thanked God that his two young men friends, prayed for in Willard Hall, have now become Christians. God is thanked for employment found. A man came in who had been a lukewarm Christian for fifteen years. He heard one sentence from God's word and went out convicted of unworthiness, and is now an earnest Christian. The Scripture is indeed the sword of the spirit.

One man says, "Look to Jesus for advice." Another: "I am looking for a lost one; pray God I may find her." Another: "Pray for my wife. Sin separates us. I know not where she is." A woman under influence of the morphine habit asks for prayers. A man said, "I never come here but that my faith is strengthened."

A dear woman, destitute and needing work, came to us. God raised up friends for her. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name believing ye shall receive," is a promise often put to the test and proved a faithful saying.

Editorial Correspondence From the Convention.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It is a great pleasure to talk to the sisterhood in this personal way. I am sure those at home are eager for a taste of the Convention and that the tid-bits that can be given in a letter will not only be relished, but will serve to whet the appetite for the Convention number.

The purity meetings preceding the Convention have attracted good audiences and much attention, and an overflow meeting was held on Saturday night. The sessions of this department have been held in the Plymouth Congregational church, and the young women have taken a very active part, notably Miss Belle Mix and Miss Rose Wood-Allen. The St. Paul Pioneer Press said: "The purity workers of the W. C. T. U. are not ordinary women. They are women who have truly the courage of their convictions." Dr. Mary Wood-Allen was not able to attend on account of ill health. The King's Daughters of Hamline furnished the white chrysanthemums that decorated the church.

It was suggested by one speaker that the purity department might well include women not members of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Teats, of California, said such clubs had been organized in her state. Mrs. Upham, of St. Paul, urged the coöperation of parents with teachers in counteracting the immorality that prevails in the public schools. Mother Prindle, who has worked in New York, London and elsewhere and recently resuscitated the Rescue Home in Minneapolis, told how to reach the street girls, and displayed that infinite sympathy which has gained for her the title, "mother." She quoted a dozen of these girls, when she asked them how to reach such girls, drunk or sober, as answering with one accord, "Speak kind words to them, mother, speak kind words to them." Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake told of her 15,000 mile trip through the West the past year with Dr. Geisel, of which you have read in THE UNION SIGNAL. She said the crying need is for a training home for rescue workers.

A paper by Mrs. E. N. Adams, of Kansas, upon "The Spiritual Life of Childhood," was full of the most exalted religious thought, and made a deep impression, as also a paper by Miss Rose Wood-Allen, on "Purity's Greatest Foe." Some of the other many prominent speakers were Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts and Mrs. Mabel L. Conklin. The meetings seem to have made a profound impression in St. Paul, if large audiences and appreciative newspaper comments are indicative of the public feeling.

The Convention proper opened late Friday A. M., as there was an entertainment in the church Thursday night and nothing could be done at preparing the room until Friday morning. Heroic work must have been done by some one for everything was beautiful and suggestive of white ribbon sentiments when we entered the church. The stars and stripes, the Union Jack and state and union banners festooned the gallery balustrade and were in evidence everywhere, but as is usual banners kept coming in all day, and finding their places like trained soldiers who knew where they belonged. In front of the beautiful organ loft, in the center, hung the large white state banner of New York, and on either side silken stars and stripes—Y banners. These were flanked by the striking peace and arbitration banners, and those of the L. T. L's, states, unions, etc., with Minnesota's elegant, large new one decorated with the falls of Minnehaha painted in colors, hung high on the balcony turn on one side, and the National banner on the other. Festooned above the front of the choir rail, and caught up in the center upon the top of New York's banner, was the broad, white satin ribbon with the silver words, "How beautiful it is to be with God," the same that arched the casket in which the Chieftain lay. Back of these, and within the choir loft, upon high standards, were the beautiful banners of Nebraska and Pennsylvania, while lower down, and to one side was the great "Jehovah Nissi" banner, presented last year by Mrs. Emilie D. Martin to the superintendents.

Around the edge of the platform stood tall, carved alabaster vases and pots filled with white and yellow chrysanthemums, and white roses and carnation pinks decorated the tables and pictures. A large picture of Miss Willard rested upon an easel in the middle foreground of the platform, and near by was another one of her and one of Mrs. Burt, the late president of New York, and at the other side, one of Mrs. Hobart, late president emeritus of Minnesota.

But the object of greatest interest was a high, carved oaken chair draped in the white W. C. T. U. star spangled banner, and wreathed in magnificent white chrysanthemums tied with broad white satin ribbon. The first day it was decorated by the National Officers and executive, on Saturday by the Eastern states, on Sunday by the Middle states, Monday by the Southern and the superintendents, Tuesday by the Middle Western, and Wednesday by the Western states and organizers.

I must not tell you too much about the opening for it is all to go into the Convention report, but I know how anxious you are to hear about the memorial service and much of it will bear repeating. It was conducted by Mrs. Stevens, and the music was in charge of Mrs. Frances W. Graham, of New York, musical director of the Convention, and famous for her singing of "Victory." Miss Willard's best beloved songs were sung, and as Miss Greenwood prayed there seemed to be a brooding of the Holy Spirit over the audience. It would be impossible to give the atmosphere of the meeting without giving the entire program and even then it would be very imperfect. There was an exalted spiritual tone to the words spoken and a Christian resignation and hope which comforted and uplifted. In the morning prayer Mrs. Clark, president of Ohio, had said of Miss Willard: "She left behind her such a luminous track that not one of us can in any way miss the path." This thought was intensified in the memorial service.

Neither space nor pencil could do justice to the words so beautifully, so fitly spoken. The addresses were like a panorama of stately ships, each freighted with the tenderest love, the strongest hopes, the highest resolves, and conscious of the deepest loyalty to the everlasting principles of right.

Anna Gordon was not on the program to speak, but Mrs. Stevens asked her to say just a few words, if she could, at the close. She stepped to the front, took one of the great white flowers by the stem, and we could see it tremble with the emotion that thrilled to her finger tips, and spoke most beautiful and touching words.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, president of New York, delivered an address worthy of the life of Mary Towne Burt. Mrs. Emilie D. Martin spoke for Madame Demorest, Mrs. Bessie Laythe Scovel for Mrs. H. A. Hobart, Mrs. Ida H. Read for Mrs. Esther T. Housh, Miss Mary Hadley for Miss Lodie E. Reed and Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens said a few appreciative words for each of the others of the twenty-four promoted comrades and friends on the list.

There were a large number of original Crusaders on the platform at the opening of the session, Mrs. Rutherford, president of Canadian W. C. T. U., Miss Lottie Wiggins, who was chairman of the Committee of the World's Convention at Toronto last year, Mrs. E. D. Bell, of Winnipeg, secretary of the Manitoba W. C. T. U., and Miss Lillian Phelps, lecturer, are here from Canada. Miss Jessie Ackermann, Miss Vincent and Miss Palmer, round-the-world missionaries, and many other visitors worthy of note are here.

In point of numbers the Convention is one of the most successful we have ever had. There are a great many spectators at each session, and many of these visitors have expressed surprise at, and their admiration of, the many talented speakers in the ranks of the W. C. T. U.

The routine business of reports was the order for Friday afternoon, and in the evening the addresses of welcome and replies. They were most excellent and enjoyable and will be given in the Convention report as fully as space will permit.

The Convention has had a good beginning. Sunshine and pure air contribute their invigorating properties. Mrs. Stevens is wielding the gavel like one to the manor born and all things seem to point to a profitable and enjoyable annual meeting.

Yours in the midst of it,
SUSANNA M. D. FRY.

Two Purity Evangelists on the Home Stretch.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Perhaps my readers will remember that I left off with Oregon in my other letter. In Washington there is yet much to be done, especially in Tacoma and Seattle. The latter has a White Shield home that has been in operation for nine years, and they have had in their care nearly five thousand girls. Praise God for these open doors for betrayed and tempted women in this far corner of our country where seamen flock in, and the foreign element abounds. In Olympia, the home of Washington's president, much beloved Miss Page, Dr. Geisel spoke while I held the fort at Tacoma. Coming back into California where there are 14,000 licensed saloons, we enjoyed a short stop with the unions in various towns through the north of the state, but hurried on to the state convention in Southern California. We reached there worn and broken in health from months of travel and work, and the sisters threw open their doors and rested us, while we took note of their good works. We felt we had been in no city where so many white ribbons were preaching silent sermons on the street as in Los Angeles, and we did not wonder as we grew to know the spirit of its W. C. T. U. workers. In fact, our workers are doing effective service wherever the Christ power is manifested. We learned to love them in Southern California. They are looking up steadfastly, that their Temperance Temple may be entirely freed from debt. Services are held for worship each Lord's Day afternoon in the beautiful hall, under Mrs. Griffith's able management, and during the week other meetings convene in the office and parlor, while the three upper floors are rented for living apartments. I believe nearly every city in Southern California has a temperance and purity organization. One union we visited told us of their victory in abolishing the saloon from their midst, but the preceding month from its most popular drugstore, there had been seen to be carried out, at the back door, 11,830 empty beer bottles. I asked one druggist how he sold his liquor, and he replied only at wholesale, and I inquired how little could I buy. I was grieved at the cunning device when he answered, one-half pint.

Coming up into Arizona, after a short visit in old Mexico, learning of their open-street saloons, we stopped at Flagstaff, where the unions have been shortlived. I longed to stay in that city of historic cliff-dwellers but had to keep appointments.

New Mexico workers are in a hard field, where railroad fares are four, five and six cents a mile, the traveling is expensive and unions are few and far between.

The women of Colorado need no word of recognition for the record of their good deeds is already made. We enjoyed their state convention.

We touched Kansas for a day and then rejoiced to find ourselves once more on the home stretch. God bless our white-ribbon women of the West. ISABEL WING LAKE.

The Texas Congress of Mothers.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—If any state is dropping out or hindering the great procession of philanthropic work "for God and Home and Native Land," the name of that state is—not Texas. This was demonstrated October 11, 12 and 13, in the Exposition building at the state fair in Dallas, as a thoughtful band of mothers convened for the purpose of discussing the greatest of all sciences—the science of motherhood. It was appropriate that the largest state in the Union, where we have room for development, mental, moral and physical, should lead in this important work. It was fitting that the state W. C. T. U. president, a woman with sympathies as broad as the acres she presides over, cosmopolitan, but pure Texan, should be the pioneer of this enterprise.

How natural that a little girl born beside the red, rolling Brazos should grow to womanhood, receive her education in the log houses of the republic of Texas, and become the state superintendent of mothers' meetings and be the central figure in Texas' first Congress of Mothers.

Mrs. Stoddard, our state president, through hard, long, continued work went down to the gates of death. While lingering a few hours amid its icy shadows she had a vision of things not seen by the eye of health. Soon after her recovery seeking rest and health, she went to Bay View, Mich., and drank in new life and vigor, and the Mothers' Congress was the first public result of this baptism of pain and her season of rest.

It is appropriate that the W. C. T. U. should mother this congress, because most of the papers were written by the members of that body; Mrs. Stoddard, with much thought and earnest prayer, arranged the program while at Bay View. It is a complete chain of mother duties, discouragements, trials, triumphs and responsibilities.

It was a representative body; seventeen cities were represented. The subjects of the papers carried the child through life. They included Prenatal Influences, Responsibility of Motherhood, Inheritance, Crime, What to do With Little Children, Kindergarten, Public Schools, Purity of Parents, Amusements, Teaching Truth, Training, Habits, Music, Physical Culture, The Cigaret, Foods, including the giving of hygienic recipes for making them, Society for Young People, and the climax was reached by a Question of Law, a paper relating to the Age of Protection Bill.

Mrs. Stoddard ruled the Congress perfectly, and not one of us knew she was being ruled. Each mother felt the responsibility of her sacred calling and the importance of her work. At the close there was a fine list of resolutions adopted, and one was that this beginning of mothers' congresses should continue, and that they should be held during the fair. This Congress is the expansion of the work of Mrs. J. N. Porter, superintendent of mothers' meetings. Mrs. Porter was elected delegate to the Woman's Congress at Washington, D. C.

This was the most important convention ever held on Texas soil, because of its far-reaching results and the eternal destinies involved.

It is a remarkable fact that with so much mother talk, it was still impossible to do without the "old maid," so Miss Eliza Whitmore, the pioneer kindergartner of Texas, read a strong paper on the importance of her work, in which she took the ground that the mother must be a kindergartner and must be what she wants her child to be.

May the Lord send an improved motherhood to the Lone Star state, then indeed will Texas shine in the national firmament, a star of the first magnitude.

New Wine.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—In THE UNION SIGNAL of November 3 reference is made to Christ's words, "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." The fact that Christ uses the word new (in Greek kainon) proves conclusively that the wine of communion was azymous wine, new wine, sweet and sacred, made the festal token of a heavenly renewal of divine fellowship.

New wine is oinos neos in Greek, vinum mustum in Latin, and must in German, and means, according to the Imperial Dictionary, "wine pressed from the grape but not fermented," therefore, not intoxicating. To say that new wine is not wine, is as absurd as to say a new bottle is not a bottle.

During the history of the Christian church, probably no doctrine has been more productive of infidelity and of intemperance than the false, presumptuous assumption that the gallons of wine made by Christ for free distribution at Cana were fermented and intoxicating.

The late Abraham Coles, A. M., M. D., Ph.D., LL.D., in his "Life of Our Lord," a standard authority to be found in the principal public libraries of Europe and America, says: "Taking our stand on the immovable rock of Christ's character we risk nothing in saying that the wine of miracle answered to the wine of nature, and was not intoxicating. No counter proof can equal the force of that drawn from His attributes. His character is everything far more than doubtful philology. The wine of nature is the wine of the cluster, holy and life-giving, the type of all nourishment,, and the type of salvation. The wine of art is not this. It represents evil rather than good. It is better fitted to typify destruction than creation. It is less a making than an unmaking. Alcohol is unmade sugar. Men brand it poison.

"It is a good reason for abstinence if our use is others' misuse, if it merely lends sanction to dangerous custom.

"There is a difference in tolerance. Alcohol is slowly induced in some, in some rapidly. We blame the drunkard, but why? He cannot help the thirst that dominates over him; but he could have helped that rash tampering with the cause that produced it, and for this he is responsible. The folly and the guilt lie in the tampering, all the rest is law.

"The first step in an attempted reformation must be the removal of the appetite, and nothing will do this but an entire abstinence from its provocative and inducing causes. This is common sense, and gospel too."

Christianity, in the sense of Christian lov- fulfills all claims, abstinence among the rest.

Respectfully yours,
A READER OF THE UNION SIGNAL.

The Defect in American Patriotism.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—Past experience has prepared us to expect that war time will be utilized by unscrupulous men in making private fortunes out of government contracts. The shocking condition of the army camps, especially the state of the men at Santiago, has probably been largely caused by fraud on the part of such contractors added to still grosser fraud and mismanagement in the commissary department of the army itself. Early in the war the press reported the arrest of a commissary officer for selling to his private advantage the government supplies. The man admitted his guilt, but asserted in excuse that "they all do it." The published statement that unbroken packages of army goods are freely on sale in the vicinity of the camps would, if a fact, prove there was some truth in the man's charge. From such straws one may judge how the wind of public opinion blows. Plainly stated the common thought is: Patriotism only relates to fighting; it does not relate to manufacturing or buying and selling.

The most unscrupulous of these men would indignantly repel the accusation of being a traitor. The flag floats over his house, he wears it in his buttonhole and rejoices in every success of the American troops. Nevertheless, stripped of verbal disguises the fact remains, he who cheats the government gives aid and comfort to its enemies and is actually a traitor.

Our soldiers suffered more from the attacks of General Fever than from any Spanish general, and to contribute to the surrender of our men to this deadly foe, differs, not in principle from being traitorously concerned in the capitulation of the troops to a human foe.

If an enriched army contractor received social ostracism instead of the court paid to wealth, his position as a traitor would be better marked. Money should no more be the object of the contractor or army officer who feeds and clothes the army than of the soldier who fights in it. Both have a right to a proper income, but our soldiers do not fight for their pay and would be justly despised if they did so. "Mercenaries" applied to troops is universally a term of contempt, but in the commissary department men are expected to be mercenary. The conception of patriotism is radically deficient which has such a different standard for soldier and merchant, for one for fighting and one for buying and selling.

Ruskin has very plainly and forcibly stated the fact that buying and selling is really a business in which loyalty to death is required. His words have a greater force with regard to the emergencies of war than in the peaceful days of which he wrote. He says in the chapter on "The Roots of Honor":

"Five great intellectual professions relating to daily necessities of life have hitherto existed—three exist necessarily in every civilized nation.

"The soldier's profession is to defend it.

"The pastor's, to teach it.

"The physician's, to keep it in health.

"The lawyer's, to enforce justice in it.

"The merchant's to provide for it.

"And the duty of all these men is, on due occasion, to die for it. . . . . .

The American people, although indignant at the mismanagement of the commissary department, have not formed as high an ideal of patriotism as this. When they do raise the standard of duty as high for their merchants as for their soldiers, the country will be able to cleanse itself alike from the stains of municipal corruption and of scandals in war management. Toward the formation of this ideal, the Good Citizenship League is doing, perhaps, the most efficient work. The enthusiasm for the flag, and the military drill in school do not, in themselves, teach intelligent patriotism. But every year greater efforts are being put forth to train our youth into patriots to whom bosses, municipal spoils and fat contracts will alike be abhorrent, and under whose coming reign corruption will not exist either in peace or war. With the present generation the defect in American patriotism can scarcely be entirely remedied. As in all reforms our hope is in the children.

Telling Testimony Against Drink.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—In the boxes placed in the depots of the different lines of railroads, I have often read copies of the temperance paper, THE UNION SIGNAL.

I travel over five states. I am a sign writer and sketch artist, and I wish to say that drinking is the cause of nearly all the woe and crime committed in our noble country. Strong drink changes the whole character of a man or woman. It causes a person to think wrong is right. It changes a kind man into a brute, a smart man into a fool, a steady man of good purpose into a weak, changeable composition of humanity, that, like the party spoken of in Scripture, is neither good for the ground nor dunghill.

I write this hoping it will cause some young man to stop and think strong drink is a curse. Strong drink is that which changes the whole course of a human life, it distorts human existence, it chills love, crushes out hope, deadens charity, and all the hope it holds out is a ruined life, a lost soul.

I am writing from experience. Young men, shun it—old men, quit it. It is the road to hell, the deadener of fondest hopes. It will at last lead to the utter casting out of human souls from the presence of Him who has said, "No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven."

I am well known in many towns of the Middle and far West, and I want this to be my testimony regarding strong drink.

A Temperance College.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—As so much has been said of colleges of late in regard to the temperance influence or non-temperance, I thought you would be pleased to have this item concerning Bates College:

Some three years ago President Chase, at a meeting of the Total Abstinence Society of Massachusetts, when he was called upon to speak, said that Bates College was heartily in sympathy with their society, and that all students matriculating at Bates were required to sign a total abstinence pledge. The statement at the time called forth a good deal of interest, and the secretary, Rev. Alfred Noon, asked for a copy of the pledge, which was published in the paper of the society. Last August Mr. Noon wrote to President Chase, asking if the pledge was still required of students, adding that if so he knew a gentleman that wished to make a small gift to the college. As a result a check of twenty-five hundred dollars was received last week from Mr. Lucius Clapp, of Randolph, Mass.

Bates College is a Free Baptist institution at Lewiston, Me., and has been open to men and women ever since it was founded, in 1855. Dr. O. B. Cheney, who was its president many years, is the husband of Mrs. E. B. Cheney, well known among W. C. T. U. workers and in the National Council of Women. The African prince, Lewis P. Clinton, is a graduate of Bates.

Our Children.

The Flag of Stars.

Air: "Watch on the Rhine."

Written for the New Jersey Loyal Temperance Legion by Mary A. Lathbury.

THE stars that float upon the blue,
The holy white, the crimson hue,
Are splendors lent us by the night.
Are glories of the morning light,
Our colors, gathered from tne sky,
Our hands shall ever hold on high.
To peaceful victories, through holy wars,
We follow, follow still the flag of stars.

We bear the flag before our band
For God, and Home, and Native Land.
For we are children of the King,
And ever as we march we sing.
Our arms are truth and righteousness,
Our hope the land we love to bless.
Beneath the holy white, the crimson bars,
We follow, follow still the flag of stars.

A Sure Enough Band of Mercy Meeting.

BY AUNT EMMA.

"BANDS of Mercy are now marching round the world,
Bands of Mercy are now marching round the world,
Bands of Mercy are now marching round the world.
Glory! glory! Hallelujah! Glory! glory!
Hallelujah! Glory, glory, Hallelujah!
Our Bands are marching on."

This was the joyous song we heard as we entered Bale's Chapel, where the Junior Union Band of Mercy was holding its regular meeting that beautiful Sabbath afternoon.

The president, a little girl with gold-colored hair, Mary Craig, stood up in front conducting the meeting.

The Band sang a number of songs on kindness and mercy. The singing was led by two big girls, Pearl Miller and Cora Scroggin, and Frances Cameron played on the organ. Frances is a great help in the "Junior" and wears the white ribbon. Then the president called for the "pledge," the "command," "promise" and meaning of the "badge," and the answers were given in concert.

The badge is a star and always means "mercy" which all wear. Maggie Kinnell read from the Bible a few verses on God's protecting care over "all His works." She offered a short, simple prayer, and all joined in the Lord's prayer, which sounded very sweet.

After the devotional exercises were concluded, the secretary, Maggie Stone, a tall girl, who sat at a little table, called the roll, and the responses were given in quotations on mercy. Then the minutes of the last meeting were approved.

The president announced that the lesson of the day was, "The Ostrich, or Giraffe of Birds." These youthful defenders of the voiceless were very much in earnest. Loring Creig read about the habits of the ostrich, and Emma Robinson told what the encyclopedia said: "The ostrich is rapidly disappearing, like all other birds, before the cruelties of man." ("No, woman,") said Emma, with lots of emphasis.

"One egg is worth twenty-five dollars. In its wild state the ostrich is no longer found, but exists on the farms, the largest being Ciro. The birds are plucked twice a year. Oh, it is dreadful," said she, with tears in her eyes, "if the ostrich can pray he would pray to die, like the dear little birds, all at once, and not die by inches. Dear girls, let us never be so cruel."

Then Celia Alexander read Miss Willard's poem, "Dear little bird with glancing wing." It seemed to fit in just there, and then she told, so softly, of that great woman's tender love for all dumb creatures. Celia also wears the white ribbon.

Mima Penny was asked to tell how she gave up wearing feathers. She said it came to her all at once that she looked like an Indian, and not like a Christian, to thus help destroy all the beautiful birds God had made.

By this time hands were going up, and all were eager to give "experiences," and the president had to call the meeting to order, while Marguerite gave the tale of "The sufferings of the ostrich," so sad and pitiful; how its feathers are plucked, and the cries of the wounded bird are heard for miles on the desert.

A great deal of talking followed, every one wanting to talk; a vote was taken and the "Juniors" decided, for the sake of example, and for the sake of the birds, they would hereafter wear featherless millinery.

Frances McCoy, a tiny girl, recited a selection from Dr. Talmage's sermon, "Teach the coming generation more mercy!"

Willie Williamson was called to the floor, and he told how wonderfully every animal is armed for its own protection.

We were so interested in this Band of Mercy we did not know how late it was, till the president gave out "The Horse," as the subject for the next meeting, and said: "We will stand and give our Mizpah."

He prayeth best who loveth best
All creatures great and small,
For the dear God who loveth us
He made and loveth all,

and we went home resolved to go again, and saying over and over, "Blessed," indeed, are those "merciful" children, the "promise" is theirs, sure.

Patty's Morning-Glories.

BY FRANCES BENNETT CALLAWAY.

"PLEASE, mamma!" persisted Patty, when the wise mother forbade her little daughter planting morning-glories under the pantry window. "I won't let them grow into the window, or tangle themselves in the blinds, or make anybody trouble. Truly, I will train them every day. Please, mamma!"

So Patty had her own way. Patty was very fond of having her own way.

It was one day in September that Patty sat on the back steps dolefully regarding a row of disgraceful morning-glories that climbed into the pantry window, tangled themselves in the shutters and swung into every nook and corner where they were not wanted.

"Haven't I told you as many as sixty times you mustn't climb into that window?" scolded Patty. "Haven't I trained you and twisted you and spent hours and hours trying to teach you to be good? I thought mebbe it was the sugar cookies, and the cook hasn't made anything but gingerbread for a week—oh, dear!"

A vagrant breeze brushed past the slender cords, shaking all the heart-shaped leaves until, twinkling and laughing in the sunshine, they seemed to laugh at Patty.

"What makes morning-glories so stubborn, anyway?" asked Patty, with a deep sigh.

At this the morning-glories sobered down directly and spoke quietly, so quietly that Patty heard their voices in the stillest places of her heart.

"Sometimes little girls are just as stubborn as morning-glories."

A Small Boy's Scheme.

A SMALL boy who is not familiar with rural ways was taken by his fond mamma for a brief stay in the country. On a farm in a neighboring county he waxed fat and sunburnt, and picked up a wondrous store of astonishing experience. One day the farmer smilingly said to his mother:

"Just ask your boy what he hid two eggs in the stable for." So, at the very first opportunity, the mother said to the six-year-old:

"My dear, what did you do with those eggs you took from the henhouse?"

"Oh, mamma," replied the boy, "I didn't want you to know about it."

"Why, it's all right," said mamma. "I only want to know what my boy did with them."

"I hid them in the stable," said the little fellow.

"And what for?"

"'Cause it's my scheme."

"Your scheme? And what is your scheme?"

"Why, you see, mamma," said the little philosopher, "when eggs is borned in a chicken-house they is always little chickens, an' I fink if they was borned in a stable dey might be little horses!"

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Did you miss the Cozy Corner last week? I was sorry to have it left out, but the Thanksgiving story just filled the page, and it was so interesting that I knew you would not want it cut down. I had a Thanksgiving letter written to you, but now the holiday is over, and I can only say that I hope you had a very pleasant time and made some one else happy and thankful.

I have several messages to deliver this week. Grace Simpson, of Hindsboro, Ill., wants some of the cousins to write her; Mary E. Hendrick, of Easthampton, Mass., asks that the cousins who write her include in the address Box 402, so the letters will be sure to reach her, as there is another Mary Hendrick in her town, and our Mary is a newcomer; then I have this nice little letter from "Another Aunt":

Will Aunt Mary be good enough to tell Harry Wilder, of Philadelphia, that all Maryland white-ribboners love the inmates of "White Hall" farm, near Chestertown, because one of the daughters is their very own, Anne Rothwell Stewart, secretary of Y work for the state. No wonder he had a good time and is working for temperance.

Now I must say goodby to you for two weeks, as the next issue of THE UNION SIGNAL will be given up to Convention reports. All your letters are carefully filed, and will appear as soon as we have room for them.

Lovingly yours,
AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little girl eleven years old. My father takes THE UNION SIGNAL. He is a minister and is interested in the W. C. T. U. He will vote the Prohibition ticket. I love to read the Children's page. The puzzle of fifteen letters is found in Genesis, the forty-first chapter and forty-fifth verse. I found it all alone.

Your niece,
Snow Hill, N. J. EVALENA A. DIGGS.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little girl ten years old. I belong to the Loyal Temperance Legion. I have four brothers and one sister. My papa is a minister of the Evangelical Association. We take THE UNION SIGNAL and I like to read it. Not long ago a blind couple, Mr. and Mrs. Hollenbeck, gave us an entertainment. They sing and play beautifully. They have two little children who can see. How thankful we ought to be who enjoy the use of all our senses.

Your loving niece,

New Islands and New Problems.

WE shall need to mobilize all our statesmanship, official and unofficial, to solve the new problems that confront the approaching session of Congress, the most important one since the Civil War. The very foundations of our government must be re-examined in devising suitable governments for our new islands. When we say that "governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed" we do not, or should not mean children, not even if they are forty years of age. Let us have "manhood suffrage," but manhood itself, first of all. Have we learned anything from our blunders with the negro, the Indian, the immigrant? Shall the sufferings of misgoverned Alaska be atoned for by teaching us "how not to do it" in our new colonies?

Prohibition has failed in Alaska only as the whole scheme of law and order has failed there, because we have not taken the trouble to learn how to govern colonies of undeveloped races. Jury trials are governmental idiocy in communities made up of savages, red and white. Let Congress instead of abolishing prohibition in Alaska, enforce it there by judges with full powers, and extend the same protection to the similar races in our new islands, to whom in their tropical homes American rum would prove yet more deadly. Let us not fall behind the European powers that have adopted this as the policy of civilization in the case of the Congo Free State. Rum in the hold and missionaries in the cabin should become a wornout tale.

In order to develop manhood enough in our new peoples for manhood suffrage we must begin with the children. The little red schoolhouse must follow the flag, and the scientific temperance education law now in force in the old territories should be extended to the new ones. The star of hope for these countries that are to be new stars in our flag hangs over the schoolhouse that is yet to be. Hawaii has the beginning of a good school system, including at least nominal temperance education. The old "school question" is likely to come up anew in providing for the Spanish islands, "division of school fund" and all. As reformers we should stand at least for effective moral education, including the Tuskegee and Hampton type of industrial education.

These islands will also need for mental and moral development into self-government, the American Sabbath, "the workingman's college," that gives the citizen four years' time for thought and self-improvement every twenty-eight years. Nations that spend this day in play and dissipation make their people children and brutes, without manhood enough to govern themselves. The Sunday bull-fights must go before the ballot can safely come to our Spanish islands.

We have a law forbidding prize-fights in our own territories. Shall we not extend it, with bull-fights added to our new islands? Meantime let us spot every patron of pugilism as a Spaniard in our own land.

Our Edmunds-Tucker law, devised to uproot polygamy in Utah, which also forbids all fornication, and our Gillett anti-divorce bill, strengthened if possible, should both be extended from the old territories to the new.

All these will help to develop the manhood on which safe self-government must rest. Bolivar said, after some sad experiments in South America, that no republic could live in the tropics. And Kipling has said:

> "There is never a law of God or man runs > North of fifty-three."

The stupendous task we are attempting in our new government bills for Alaska and our tropical islands is to disprove both these sayings. Whether local self-government goes to these arctic and tropic corners of Greater America or not, "law" must go in Anglo-Saxon majesty and blessing. And in order to do this we must first of all look to the officers we send. Mrs. Josephine Shaw Lowell has shown in our columns how Spain lost her islands by giving them as "spoils" to political favorites. Our Indian troubles have been mostly due to the same cause. And yet the majority of congressmen, if not prevented by popular protest, will make "plums" of these islands for their henchmen. The havoc wrought in the army by the "spoils system" has been laid persistently on individuals. It is rather a timely reinforcement of civil service reform just when a great increase in our civil list makes it imperative to strengthen it.

Nearest of all, with the inevitable increase of our army—we shall need to fight the cry for a "big army"—comes the question of the "canteen," which the President has evidently determined to dodge but which comes up at the opening of Congress in the first "call of committees," which will bring up, with a favorable report, the Ellis Bill, abolishing this and other government liquor selling. Since Congress adjourned, the bill has been reinforced by the horrors of the regimental saloons, by the defeat of Cervera's drunken crews, by the anti-canteen sentiments of Generals Miles, Shafter, Wheeler, Henry and many others of our officers, and by the march of Kitchener's victorious abstainers up the Nile. One more reinforcement would insure victory, namely, the marching of impressive deputations, representing churches and societies, to the residences of congressmen while they are at home, to present this and other issues above, on none of which the ballot-box has spoken. Public sentiment must therefore be expressed on these in the mail box by petitions and letters, or better, by meeting our representatives and senators face to face. Whole trainloads went hundreds of miles to see Candidate McKinley in the interest of "sound money." Shall we not be willing, a few of us, to go to the next street or the next town to see our congressmen or senator in behalf of "sound morals"?

The Jews and Prophecy.

"THE Jews, your majesty," the answer given by the court chaplain to Frederick the Great, who had asked for a brief demonstration of the truth of Christianity, was a most appropriate reply. The history of the Jewish people, in fulfillment of prophecy, affords an irrefragable proof of the divine origin of the Christian religion.

The destruction of the Jewish capital by the Romans, in 70 A. D., was one of the most disastrous events in history. According to Josephus, 1,300,000 people perished in the siege of Jerusalem and in the previous and subsequent destruction of the neighboring cities and villages. Since that time, the Jews have been without a government or country, scattered among the nations of the earth. All through these centuries, they have suffered unparalleled persecutions, yet they still exist and preserve their individuality. Dr. Alexander Keith well says: "That the people of a single state (which was of very limited extent and power in comparison with some of the monarchies which surrounded it) should first have been rooted up out of their own land in anger, wrath and great indignation, the like of which was never experienced by the mightiest among the ancient empires, which all fell imperceptibly away at a lighter stroke, and that afterward, though scattered among all nations, and finding no ease among them all, they should have withstood eighteen centuries of almost unremitted persecution, and that after so many generations have elapsed, they should still retain their distinctive form, or, as it may be called, their individuality of character, is assuredly the most marvelous event that is recorded in the history of nations."

This unique history was all foretold by the Israelitish prophets. The twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy accurately describes the events that have occurred in the history of the Jewish people during the past eighteen centuries; and the various prophetical books of the Old Testament contain similar predictions. There can be no question as to the remote antiquity of the prophecies. Notwithstanding the claim of some critics that several of the books of the Old Testament were not written until long after the dates to which they are generally ascribed, all scholars admit that the entire Old Testament was in existence before the commencement of the Christian era, so overwhelming is the evidence in support of the fact.

Prophecy also refers to the restoration of the Jews to Palestine. The following prediction of our Lord has received a great deal of attention of late from many Bible students, who believe that the signs of the times indicate that Jerusalem will not be much longer in the possession of the Gentiles, but will soon be restored to the Jewish people: "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."—Luke 21:24. An interesting fact in connection with this prediction is that a great effort was made by the Roman Emperor, Julian, to rebuild the Temple at Jerusalem and restore the Jews to the land of their ancestors, in order to disprove the truth of the prophetic word. The Jews were eager for the work, and with all the power of the civilized world behind the Emperor, there seemed no reason why, judging from a human standpoint, Julian's attempt should be unsuccessful. Historians of that period, however, state that balls of fire burst from the earth, making it impossible for the workmen to erect the building, and consequently the work was abandoned. So strong is the evidence of this fact that even Gibbon, the infidel, acknowledged that it was sufficient to satisfy a believing, and astonish an incredulous mind. Julian was unable to disprove the truth of the prophecy. The Jews have never been able to recover possession of Jerusalem, but the place has been continually trodden down of the Gentiles.

What argument could be stronger than that which is afforded Christianity by the foregoing facts? Such facts as these demonstrate that the Bible is no mere human book, but that its utterances were indeed dictated by Omniscience.

Memorial Service a. the Convention.

TEN-THIRTY o'clock on Friday morning, the first meeting of the Convention, was the set time in the program for the memorial services of Frances E. Willard and the other promoted ones. It is not too much to say that it was a remarkable meeting. There were fifteen addresses, besides seven solos and songs, the reading of the list of the promoted, and the Scripture lesson and prayer, but no one grew weary of "sitting together in heavenly places." Much might be said of the comforting inspiration of the prayer and the songs, and the deep sympathy that ran from heart to heart, but the most marked characteristic was the resigned, trustful, Christian spirit that pervaded the entire body. It was a great family of mourners sweetly resigned to the will of the Lord and comforted by the thought of the beautiful land of love and the reward for the faithful, into which Miss Willard had entered, and unto which all might go. It was as if they had gathered together to hear the last will and testament of the head of the house, and all were fully satisfied. Everything was left to them, all the work, all the plans, all the possibilities, all the consummations of all the far-reaching, comprehensive departments. Everything was now more fully theirs than ever before, and they took the responsibility almost as a sacrament.

The reserve power of the organization and the intellectual training of its women, their poise of mind and heart were never more clearly revealed. The addresses were short, full of suppressed feeling, polished and powerful. They were extemporaneous, and each was in its way a nugget of pure gold. There were no wordy eulogies, no efforts at rhetoric or oratory, no studied phrases, and what was very remarkable no repetitions. They not only showed the training of the speakers, but the breadth of the organization, for whether it was the old Crusaders, the superintendents, the organizers, the East or the West which was represented, each one had a word of her own, concerning which she could but give flashlights as she took her turn, but each was perfect in its way. It was a sweetly solemn hour long to be remembered and one in which the hearts of the women were knit together as they talked of Frances E. Willard, Mary Towne Burt, Madam Demorest and others who have this year learned "how beautiful it is to be with God."

Good Leadership.

MUCH has been said on this subject from time to time in our columns. Perhaps no society was ever blessed with better leaders than has been our own W. C. T. U. Our officers have been largely, if not altogether, women who were identified with the work from the first and conversant with all of its expansions. Not only that, but they have been, in the main, born organizers, born generals.

Bishop W. F. Mallalieu in a late article in the Epworth Herald, under the caption, "Revival Leadership," says:

"The secret of success in the movement of aggregations of individuals is leadership. A good army with poor leadership is never equal to an inferior army with good leadership. Grant was worth more than fifty thousand men when he set out on the Wilderness campaign. Napoleon was more to France for almost a score of years—stormy, bloody, desperate years—than any fifty thousand soldiers of all the mighty armies under his command."

We believe all that he says. The continuation of one "Chieftain" for our host for so many years was due to the fact that she was a good general more largely, perhaps, than to any other one thing. At this writing her successor, who is to lead on the army in the near future, has not been selected. But we prophesy that she will be a woman of strong, common sense, excellent judgment, well-poised throughout, just, honorable, God-fearing and God-loving, far-sighted, with a will of iron and a heart of love, and withal that she will be a Deborah able to execute and to inspire others. We can not name her as this is written one week before the election, but she will be announced in another part of the paper. We are safe in saying that she will have the loyal following of all of the white-ribbon army. God bless the successor of Frances E. Willard.

"Seeing to Things."

SOME telling sentiments have been going the rounds of the papers under the caption, "The Pace that Kills." We select a few of them and interpolate our editorial comment as the spirit moves.

Good, hard, faithful attention to business never killed any one, man or woman. Worry and the "seeing to things" idea—these are the two nails in the business woman's coffin.

Women often worry because other people do not see to things. Might not the "seeing" be divided up?

The "seeing to things" idea is distinctly feminine. No man ever had it. Every woman is born with it.

Not at all to all three of these propositions. It is cultivated in the girl by "picking up" after her big brother on Monday morning and at set times during all the days, besides being obliged to do her own "seeing to things."

Men sit in a street car and watch the driver of a truck groan and tug and try to get his wheels off the track, and not a man will move to help that driver or even sigh in sympathy. Every woman in the car is edging and peering and wishing she dared go out on the platform and "see to that truck."

Correct. The time may come when the "new woman" will not wait or wish for the "old man" to stir, but will just go and "see to it" herself.

That's the thing which kills women.

Sure. And why shouldn't carrying double kill even a woman? The other day a man let his young wife start west with two babies and luggage for the long trip. He put her on a suburban train to come to Chicago and make the change alone after dark. When asked why he did not go with her and see her safely started, he said he wasn't "much of a baby that way."

When a business man gets up in the morning he takes his bath, goes into the dining-room and eats his breakfast, kisses his family goodby, and goes down town to work, like a sensible man. The business woman—do you know her? I do.

I will tell you what the business woman does. She gets up early and goes into the children's room and fusses around for half an hour or so. If you ask her what she is doing she'll say she is "seeing to things."

Bless her! She will "see to" the babies if she is a business woman. But if there are no babies, she ought to be more sensible, we admit. She should take her bath, go into the dining-room and eat her breakfast, kiss her husband goodby and go down town like a sensible woman.

Then the writer goes on to say that she sits up nights studying fashion books for a new way to have a dress made, tears her hat to pieces and makes it over, and tries to do things that she can not and ought not.

Give her money enough to pay first-class dressmakers, milliners, etc., and she will be only too glad to free herself from the drudgery named.

She worries about other people's troubles, she frets over other people's children, she almost takes medicine for other people's headaches, and she puts all her friends into nervous irritation trying to "see to them."

This particular woman is overworked, sick and nervous, and has had bad training all her life, otherwise she could find enough to worry about and "see to" in her own family. She ought to be sent to a rest hospital.

If the business woman is worth one-half her salary, she puts all these things out of her mind at the office.

Certainly, and many of them actually feel rested thereby. "Seeing to things" is wearing; it is as bad as seeing things sometimes. Might not the division of labor principle cure this abnormal "seing to things"? If it were cultivated in boys as well as girls, there probably would be less of the female manifestation of it.

Faith.

"WHEN the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith in the earth?" The question of the great Teacher, uttered nearly nineteen hundred years ago to His little band of disciples, repeated to every generation has gathered force with every repetition and comes with peculiar significance to us of this age. In the teaching of the Master, faith was the touchstone by which all human character was tested and it involved all the possibilities of human achievement. "O ye of little faith!" "According to your faith be it unto you."

"When the Son of Man cometh!" Coming He is every day in this crucial period. His signs the breaking up of customs and institutions strained to bursting by the growing Christlife within, the new responsibilities thrust upon us as a people, the unifying of the race as never before since the fall. In these "wonders of our day" He is coming with power and great glory. Does He find faith? With us as with those of old, it is the touchstone by which our civilization shall stand or fall. A certain kind of faith there certainly is. There is faith which loudly proclaims belief in an infinite, all-wise Creator of the universe. How many people are there who really believe that God rules this world in righteousness, believe it so confidently that they make it the basis of their everyday living as constantly and absolutely as they do the multiplication table?

You will not get an answer to the question by asking for a show of hands, but the moment you sound the tocsin for reform work, every man and woman will gravitate to his place. Appeal to the voters of a great city against the liquor traffic; almost every one will admit every thing you say of its evils, they will acknowledge that it is a curse and only a curse, that its destruction would be the greatest blessing that could come to the community. A few will join you in a crusade for its utter annihilation, but the majority of professedly Christian men will tell you that your attempt is Quixotic and can have only one result, to increase the power of the liquor traffic. They will assure you that compromise is the only wise and safe policy. To destroy the evil is impossible, we can only hope for its mitigation by uniting our forces in an effort to restrict it. Such a conclusion can have for its major premise no other than this: God does not rule this world, the forces of evil have proved too strong for Him and He has left us to make what terms we may with the enemy.

Rather let us remember that according to our faith it will surely be unto us. Not only our national life, but our civilization is at stake in the issues which are pressing upon us. Either we go forward to win the world and establish here the kingdom of God, or we go down as the civilizations of the past have gone down in hopeless ruin. If human forces alone are engaged, the result is not hard to foretell. Human wisdom and human goodness are not equal to the task. "The Son of man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?"

Y's at Work.

MARYLAND.

THE Y. W. C. T. U. of Maryland held its annual conference ou Tuesday, October 11, in the M. P. church at Chestertown, Kent county, Miss Anne R. Stewart, state secretary, presiding. A more successful or enjoyable conference has never been held in our state; only about twenty-five delegates attended but great interest was manifest.

We were addressed by Miss Ensign, National Y organizer, by our state officers and by five local ministers. The annual address of Miss Stewart was full of encouragement, helpfulness and appreciation of the work done by her fellow-workers. A personal letter from Miss Clara Parrish was read and much enjoyed. The W. C. T. U. executive then in session granted us the privilege of naming a delegate at large to the National Convention, and Miss Emily Fulwood, who is Baltimore city secretary, was unanimously chosen.

The election of officers resulted in the unanimous choice of Miss Stewart as state secretary, and Miss Matthews, Kent county, as custodian. A pleasing feature of the afternoon proceedings was the awarding of the prize banner to Kent county for the greatest increase in membership.

The Y girls of "Maryland, my Maryland," send greetings, and are working with you to bring Christ's Kingdom here on earth.

KATHERINE E. PARLETT,
Annapolis. Conference Sec.

DEAR Y EDITOR:—Maryland has not been silent so long because the work was at a standstill here, but because THE UNION SIGNAL letter, in the press of other duties, has been deferred. The past convention year has been among the best we have ever known, and our conference was a W. C. T. U. convention in miniature.

For some time we have been working to establish county Y secretaries, and although it seemed practical, it was not successful until last year; but now our hearts have been gladdened by knowing that our county membership has nearly doubled itself, and in the thirteen organized counties in our state, we have secretaries in eleven, this not including Baltimore city, which also has a Y secretary. In three counties young people's temperance rallies have been held under the auspices of the Young Woman's Branch that were most successful, showing conclusively that young people generally are interested in this subject, and are ready to coöperate if their attention is only brought to it in the proper way. Y conferences have been held in Baltimore city, and last spring the city unions gave, in Music Hall, "The Scottish Reformation," clearing over $300 for their work. A novel thing about the programs was that between the advertisements were temperance thoughts, so that the audience, waiting between the scenes, could "read, ponder and remember."

There has been advancement shown along many lines, but there has seemed to be an awakening about questions of finance that is encouraging, more especially as the local unions are beginning to see the relation they bear to county and state work. One hundred Y Almanacs were sold at the annual conference and convention, and about fifteen at a county conference a few days later. We also sent forty-five dollars to the Clara Parrish fund.

Since the convention five new Y's have been organized, three in Baltimore city, two in Harford county, and two prospective ones it is hoped will materialize in the next two weeks in Kent county.

I fear I am taking too much space, but must give you our rallying cry, "1,000 paid-up members in 1899." Yours to carry out that cry,

ANNE ROTHWELL STEWART.

World's W. C. T. U.

FOR some time the Launceston union has been endeavoring to create an interest in Y work, and at last patient efforts have been rewarded. With the object of conferring with a number of young women on the subject, a drawing-room meeting was held lately, in a member's home. The weather was wet and boisterous, and therefore not at all conducive to a good attendance, but that success does not depend on numbers, was evidenced in this case, as those who came proved to be in earnest and ready to enlist in Y ranks. Mrs. Blair, Colonial secretary, presided and read an excellent little paper written by Miss M. Lodge, the Colonial superintendent, which set forth the objects and advantages of Y unions. The result of the evening's deliberations was that one was organized there and then, twelve members enrolling, including Mrs. Burbery, Jr., as president. Departments of work are to be taken up, and what promises to be a large and active union was launched. Already our Y's have begun to serve by taking the responsibility of getting up the musical program for the W. C. T. U. public meeting to be held on the evening of the 28th. As this is our firstborn Y union we greet it with a specially tender love, and send up a special note of thanksgiving to our Father for this new addition to our family.

Encouraged by the competition manifested last year in the offer of prizes to children attending city state schools, for answers to questions on scientific temperance instruction, the Launceston union has decided to continue these awards this year. In this way children will be encouraged to take an increasing interest in the subjects which form part of the curriculum in our state schools.

The Ross union has just held a successful public meeting at which R. C. Kermode, Esq., presided. This gentleman is a ready helper in all good work and in his usual forceful way spoke on the evils of the drink traffic and urged the importance of abstinence. This small midland union has lately begun L. T. L. work and is meeting with encouragement by the intelligent interest the children are manifesting.

The Tasmanian Prohibition League is now fairly launched, with the Rev. H. Jones, M. A., as president, and four vice-presidents, two of which are Mrs. Fysh, local W. C. T. U. president, and Mrs. Blair, colonial secretary. The League is seeking the affiliation of all temperance bodies, and two of our local unions—Launceston and Burnie—have joined.

That there is need for concerted and constant efforts by the temperance party is frequently evidenced, but at no time more than at present. The anti-temperance folks are ever on the alert to increase the strength of their position and make more powerful the liquor traffic. In the House of Assembly several amendments to the Licensing Bill have been proposed, which would prove very disastrous. These are legalizing the sale of drink at stock sales and licensing booths on railway or public works. The excuse made in defense of these propositions is that they would do away with sly grog selling. These proposed amendments are another expression of the heartlessness of the liquor traffic. A strong protest against these measures has been sent to the House of Assembly by the Tasmanian Temperance Alliance, and one, also, from our Colonial union. We are trusting that by prayer and effort the deliberations of these legislators will be brought to confusion. We have several ardent temperance men in the House, and one of these, Mr. Bradley, introduced a motion which was really a local option one, but it was rejected, though not by an overwhelming majority.

The Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has held a successful annual meeting which was presided over by the mayor, Alderman Sutton. This opportunity was taken to present the essay prizes to those who had gained them, and Lady Bradden had the pleasure of giving these to thirteen scholars attending city state schools. Regret was expressed that the efforts to organize Mercy Bands had not met with the encouragement anticipated. A greater interest has been manifested in the society's objects; literature bearing on kindness to our dumb helpers has been circulated and 120 picture sheets have been mounted and sent to state schools in northern Tasmania. Deeds of mercy to our four-footed friends are increasing and so the spirit of kindness is shedding its tender rays of light over all.

We shall think of our American sisters when assembled in their first Convention without her, whom we all loved, and our hearts will be lifted up in tender sympathy and prayer for them, that He who has blessed them in the past will do so still, and that He who has led so victoriously will do so in the future.

In Remembrance of Miss Willard.

DURING the last few weeks Lady Henry Somerset has been occupied at Eastnor Castle in modeling a statuette in loving remembrance of her friend and fellow-worker in the temperance cause, the late Miss Frances E. Willard.

The statuette is about eighteen inches high, and represents Miss Willard in that attitude which was peculiarly characteristic of her, as she used to stand on the platform making her unique and eloquent speeches. The left hand is extended, as it always was, in a sort of generous offer of tender help and blessing to the humanity she so lavishly loved. Her dress falls in graceful folds, and the bow of white ribbon, her beloved emblem of temperance and purity for all the world, adorns her left side. Lady Henry has succeeded in catching and embodying the truly spiritual characteristics of Miss Willard, and brings before us the much loved idealist who seemed able, as no other, to uplift our souls to the heavenly spheres where she herself always dwelt. Her fine features and beautifully shaped head, with the abundant hair, have been faithfully reproduced.

A number of casts have been taken of Miss Willard's statuette, and it is intended that these shall be sold and the proceeds devoted to the Industrial Farm Home at Duxhurst. It will be remembered how strong was Miss Willard's interest in this home for inebriate women, the central hall having been named in her honor.

[The above note is by Miss Christina Bremner, a well-known London journalist. Further particulars concerning the sale of these statuettes will be given soon in THE UNION SIGNAL.—THE EDITORS.]

The Plebiscite Campaign in British Columbia.

BRITISH COLUMBIA prohibitionists have worked hard and well deserve the victory which crowned their efforts in the recent campaign. They were told in different ways and by different parties that a majority vote could never be obtained. Nevertheless, the martial spirit stirred within them, and they began to burnish their swords and charge their guns. First of all, the Provincial W. C. T. U., in their annual convention of 1897, appointed a plebiscite committee to watch events and be ready for action. At the time of the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in Toronto, the Royal Templars of Temperance called a convention for the purpose of organizing a Dominion Federation Association, in which the British Columbia W. C. T. U. was represented by Mrs. Gordon Grant, of Victoria, the British Columbia delegate to the Dominion W. C. T. U. convention. The Federation Convention appointed her organizing secretary for her province, and upon her return she at once organized a Provincial Association in Victoria, which proceeded to set the campaign in order.

As soon as the Plebiscite Bill passed the Dominion house they called a convention to meet in Vancouver, August 9. The Dominion Alliance previous to this date had held their big convention in Toronto, to which British Columbia had sent two representatives, Rev. A. E. Green and Rev. J. C. Speer, and their report, given before the Federation convention resulted in the merging of that association into a provincial branch of the Dominion Alliance. Besides the regular officers and members of executive three persons were employed for special duty, Rev. A. E. Green to travel through the Upper country beyond Yale, to lecture and organize local branches; Miss A. L. A. Murcutt for the same work on the coast below Yale, and Rev. P. C. L. Harris to make his headquarters in Vancouver as corresponding secretary and organizer. A publishing committee was given charge of the responsible work of providing a British Columbia Alliance organ, one thousand copies to be issued weekly and scattered broadcast over the province. This was given the name of Campaign Bulletin and began as a four page sheet, but as the weeks went by and the demand increased the paper was enlarged to eight pages and 12,500 copies were issued twice. Rev. Dr. Eby, of Vancouver, undertook, without any remuneration, to do the work of editing and demonstrated his superior ability in this line by producing a paper which gave general satisfaction and proved an untold power for good, as it reached homes and individuals no other agency could approach. The Dominion Alliance also deserve a genuine vote of thanks for the large quantity of free literature which they forwarded and which was well distributed.

The Rev. A. E. Green found the upper section of the country sadly in need of help, for as yet, in many places, no temperance societies have been planted. The banner of prohibition, however, has now been unfurled, the prohibition sentiment of the people has been aroused and a declaration of principles expressed at the polls.

Miss Murcutt had a better cultivated field to work in, the various temperance organizations having for years past been sowing prohibition seed. Neither was she a stranger to her audiences, as she had, three months before, gone over the ground under the auspices of the Provincial W. C. T. U. remaining a week or two in each place and lecturing to crowded houses. Miss Murcutt is a specially attractive and talented young woman from Australia, who, as Australasian W. C. T. U. organizer and lecturer visited Toronto at the time of the World's W. C. T. U. Convention, and will doubtless be a pleasant memory to many of the delegates from the United States and Canada. She proved so popular in British Columbia and so won the love of the workers that although she had been filling a three months' line of work in the Pacific states and was then in San Francisco, the Alliance convention invited her to return to British Columbia as a campaign lecturer. Having made the Dominion plebiscite literature a special study, she was prepared to give her audiences clear-cut facts and figures which, together with her pleasing manner and power of oratory, convinced many skeptics and gained a multitude of votes. On the streets of Nanaimo, Wellington, Union and Vancouver, she spoke to large open-air gatherings night after night, with great acceptance.

Rev. P. C. L. Harris proved invaluable at headquarters, pushing out the literature, answering correspondence, and between times getting a short distance out of the city to organize and lecture. He also supplied Rev. A. E. Green's pulpit.

Rev. J. C. Speer, of Victoria, as president of the Federation Association, and later of the Provincial Alliance, has also done heroic service during the campaign, both in his own church and by addresses given on the street corners of Victoria and vicinity, and in some of the other coast cities. Pastors of churches throughout the province have, as a whole, stood for prohibition, and preached it to their people. The temperance societies have each and all done well. Adverse circumstances have arisen, opposing forces have hindered progress in many ways and places, nevertheless the victory has been won, and British Columbia stands proudly among her sister provinces with a prohibition majority vote of about one thousand.

After the vote had been taken the Alliance executive met to settle up accounts and decided to call another convention for October 27 on strictly Alliance lines. This convention also met in Vancouver and was largely attended by representative persons. The British Columbia Alliance is now placed on a permanent basis, and to secure the working order of local branches it was voted that an organizing lecturer be again sent over the field worked during campaign to reorganize for fresh and aggressive action.

In addition to the regularly appointed organizers and lecturers, the Prohibitionists of British Columbia owe a debt of gratitude to three gospel ministers from abroad who came and volunteered their services during the campaign, viz., Rev. D. V. Lucas, D. D., of Grimsby, Ont.; Rev. Dr. Spencer, of Brantford, Ont., and Rev. Mr. Coombs, of Seattle, Washington. These all attracted good audiences and did good service, both in public buildings and on the street corners.

Within the last few months sentiment nas been created and work has been accomplished, which if properly followed up will tell mightily in future years for God and home and country.

Pennsylvania.

THE Keystone state has passed another milestone in W. C. T. U. history. The twenty-fourth gathering of the clans in Reading, October 14-18, was of unusual interest and profit. The loyal hearts of Reading arranged with up-to-date methods for the coming of delegates from almost every county. The Stanfer building, with commodious accommodations, was the headquarters; the state officers were pleasantly entertained there. The First Presbyterian church kindly opened its doors to receive our organization, and was tastefully decorated with banners and L. T. L. pledge cards. The artistic program prepared by the secretaries was a companion piece to the beautiful souvenir presented by the Y's. The sessions were crowned with the usual zeal, earnestness and enthusiasm that stamps the Keystone workers. From the opening executive meeting, followed by delegates' prayer-meeting, on through every hour, the Bible readings, excellent address of president, acceptable and encouraging report of corresponding secretary, showing 14,500 members fifty-nine new unions and an activity in every department; the admirable report of treasurer, reports of superintendents, physical culture drills, papers on different topics, purity and other conferences, evening sessions, in which our guests, Rev. Anna Shaw, Mesdames Hoffman, Hammer, Conklin, Miss Clothier and Madame Barakat, took part, all gave evidence of the continued alertness and keep-at-a-tive-ness of our white-ribboners.

The rally of the L. T. L's Sabbath afternoon was of special interest, the address by Rev. Chas. Rhoads and the chalk-talk by Miss Wintringer being the "centers of attraction" to the large audience of Sunday-school workers.

The Y evening gave proof of the growing power and influence of the young men and women in the ranks. The program was carried out in pleasing manner by the loved state secretary, Miss A. E. Thomas.

The resolutions passed had in them "grit and gumption," and will show forth the principles by which we stand united in our efforts to steadily press on.

Through the kindness of our prohibition brother, Mr. Stanfer, the delegates had a pleasant ride round the Neversink Mountains. Speakers filled the pulpits on Sabbath, and many names were secured as members. Among the many pleasant features of the convention was the presentation to the state of a beautiful crayon picture of our beloved Miss Willard, the work and gift of Mrs. Anna B. North, president of Berks county (in which the convention met). The artistic frame was procured from the sale of the Willard pins by Mrs. Chambers.

The officers were all re-elected except the vice-president-at-large, Mrs. H. H. Forest being chosen for the office this year. With heartfelt thanks for the year's record, we step into another year to "spend and be spent" in the service of Him we love and whose we are.

Texas.

THE fourth annual convention of the eighth district was held at Weatherford, September 22 and 23, Mrs. Eunice Castor, of Fort Worth, district president, in the chair.

Mrs. H. M. Stoddard, state president, was present and gave a parliamentary drill and Temple talk. Delegates showed an active interest by adopting plans for improving and continuing the work. Eleven unions are represented in this district. Resolutions were passed endorsing the state and National departments of work, and the action of the National executive board in discontinuing the Temple as an affiliated interest. A resolution against the army canteen was also adopted.

A petition to be sent to the Northwestern Texas conference, asking that they use unfermented wine at communion was presented to the Methodist ladies, and many names secured. The following officers were elected to serve the ensuing year: Mrs. Eunice Castor, Fort Worth, president; Mrs. Sallie P. Hyman, Stephenville, recording secretary; Mrs. J. M. Boswell, Grandbury, treasurer. The appointing of superintendents was left to the president. A motion was carried that each union in the district donate at least one dollar to carry on state press work.

The First Texas Congress of Mothers was held at Dallas during the fair, commencing on October 11, continuing three days with increasing interest. Mrs. Stoddard presided at these meetings, and gave an address on "Why a Mothers' Congress," which was replete with seed thoughts, which will help to arouse and educate public sentiment in favor of a special training for motherhood which will insure the intelligent rearing of children. Mrs. M. R. Walton, of Austin, president of the Texas Woman's Press Association, gave a paper on "How Habits are Formed," followed by several others along the same lines. Many other topics were discussed, as well as questions asked and answered upon all subjects mentioned. Mrs. Porter was requested to send out leaflets embodying the facts contained in an extract from the writings of a physician on the subject of prenatal influences, which were considered new, truthful and important.

The fifth district held a convention at Ladonia, October 18 and 19, district president, Mrs. Schimelphenig. This indefatigable worker is the mother of eight children, who are never neglected, though she finds time with voice and pen to help on

This has been scientifically proven to be true in the manufacture of the ordinary white flour. The theory that the whitest is the best flour is absolutely false. the good work for God, and Home and Native Land.

The sixth district has also held a convention at Ennis; Mrs. M. E. Goodman, of Hillsboro, is president. A medal contest was held, Miss Ransom, of Ennis, the winner. A daily report of all these conventions was made by the local papers, and the papers read at the congress are being published in the Dallas News, with many of the photographs of the authors together with short biographical sketches. Credit is due to the zeal of our state press superintendent, Miss Fanny L. Armstrong, for this. She gave the response to the address of welcome at the sixth district convention and organized an L. T. L. with forty-five members. This Legion was named for her. Four of the papers prepared for the "Congress" whose authors were unable to be present, were read by her, and our state paper is indebted to her for reports as well as "ye reporter."

The Y's superintendent of work among the young people of our state, Miss May H. Richmond, of Ennis, has published a letter in our state paper calling upon them to "coöperate with her in the extension and expansion" of this branch of our work. She says: "Let us plan together, and work together, that through our united efforts we may make Texas the banner Y state of the union."

The union reading rooms are a great feature of our work in Texarkana. The Cotton Belt railroad contributes liberally to their support. Miss Helen Gould donates a dozen or two of the finest periodicals year after year.

We have as Prohibition candidate for governor Mr. B. P. Bailey, of Houston. Coleman's prohibition vote, September 2, stood for prohibition 156 to 45. The vote in Timpson, Shelby county, stood 205 for to 21 against.

The Hutchinson physiologies have been adopted as text-books in that science for five years in this state. Although not endorsed by Mrs. Hunt they are quite thoroughly up with advanced knowledge as to the effect of narcotics upon the system, says our state president, and she suggests that "each W. C. T. U. woman see that this science is taught in the primary and intermediate grades. Visit your schools, make friends of your teachers, and you will reap great results." Since Mrs. Stoddard's return to the state in August, she has attended three district conventions, beside the congress of which she was the originator. She has held meetings at Indian Gap, Hamilton and Hico, the latter a prohibition town. Mrs. Stoddard says of it: "Any person doubting the value of prohibition should visit this town with its fine business houses, public and private schools and good churches. The clean city is an object lesson, and he who runs may read."

The North Austin union celebrated September 22, World's W. C. T. U. day, by a public mothers' meeting. The best thing on the program was a very able paper by the principal of the East Austin school, a gentleman who is interested in the various lines of our work. His topic was "Tobacco," but he touched upon health, heredity and the single standard, putting on the white ribbon at the close.

Chappel Hill has had a medal contest recently. Fifty children participated. The proceeds amounted to ten dollars. Our state paper says: "The best result was the temperance sentiment made through the lips and impressed for all time on the memories of the contestants, our future citizens and statesmen." A petition is being circulated extensively against the army canteen and is receiving many signatures.

Since her return to the state Mrs. Stoddard has held seventeen public meetings, visited seventeen different towns, held thirty-one meetings for women for the purpose of organization, etc., organized three new unions, seventy-two new members secured.

The first colored W. C. T. U. convention was held at Galveston, July 2. The delegation was not large but was very enthusiastic. There are thirty-two unions all in good working order. The following state officers were elected: President, Mrs. Carrie Z. Dodson, Palestine; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Miller, Houston; recording secretary, Miss S. Adams, Corsicana; treasurer, Mrs. F. K. Chase, Dallas. Governor Culberson appointed for the second time Mrs. Lizzie Johnson, of Paris, our state superintendent of work among prisons, to represent Texas in the National Prison Association, held in Indianapolis in October.

Mrs. Sallie C. Wood, president of North Austin union, is the new superintendent of work among soldiers and sailors.

Owing to the illness and death of my dear father which occurred in August and my removal from Houston to my grandson's ranch twelve miles in the country, I have neglected my reportorial work. I ask the indulgence of all interested persons, hoping hereafter to be heard from monthly.

Men who are always in a hurry, and most men are, want a soap for the toilet that will lather quickly and freely in hot or cold water. Other soaps than Ivory may have this quality, but will likely contain alkali, which is injurious to the skin. Ivory Soap is made of pure vegetable oils, no alkali; produces a white, foamy lather, that cleanses thoroughly and rinses easily and quickly. Money cannot buy a better soap for the toilet.

Florida.

OUR calendars tell us that summer is ended; the delightfully cool mornings and evenings confirm the statement, although the noontide heat remains. But it is past, the briefest, busiest and blessedest of all summers in the W. C. T. U. annals of fair Florida.

We have had an unexpected, all-absorbing work to do, and have done it "with our might." We realize that our labors, our love and prayers for the soldier and sailor boys have not been in vain, so signally has God blessed our efforts for their good. In Tampa, our work practically closed when the troops were removed. There was no further use for an open room, ice water, reading and writing facilities and social intercourse; but there were still sick ones in the hospital to cheer and comfort, who were faithfully looked after to the last. Homes were opened to many of these, where they were nursed tenderly to health and helped off to their homes. One poor fellow, bursting into tears, weak from severe illness, when told he might soon go home, cried out, "Why, don't you know I have no home, any more than an old yellow dog?" But one of the best homes in the city sheltered him and loving mother hearts poured sympathy and good cheer into the lonely life of the homeless boy until health returned and fitted him for service again.

We white-ribboners of Tampa want, through the columns of our SIGNAL, to thank all the kind friends whose timely gifts enabled us to do so much for the soldiers. From twenty-three New Hampshire unions I received seventy dollars, in sums ranging from one to eight dollars, nickel collections, as suggested by their state president, Miss Wendell.

Hospital supplies and moneys have come to us from our sister unions of many states. The Woman's Relief Corps of Wisconsin sent, through Mrs. L. F. Withers, of Eau Claire, fifteen dollars; other corps responded nobly and the G. A. R. Post of St. Petersburg, Fla., contributed fifteen dollars. Union (W. C. T. U.), Ripley, O., gave the same amount—but I could not here speak of all, suffice it to say we are thankful for the confidence shown in our integrity and wisdom in distributing that committed to our care.

Volumes could not contain a record of all that has been done; eternity, alone, will tell. Our Jacksonville sisters have done, and are still doing, a noble work, led by their president, Mrs. E. L. Goodhue. I have received no late news from them.

Florida regretfully parts with Mrs. M. E. L. Webb, state president, who is now a resident of Chicago, where she, with her husband and son are happily reunited, the son having been in business in that city for some time. We commend Mrs. Webb to the white-ribboners of Chicago, assuring them that "our loss is their gain" in that an efficient Christian worker is added to their force.

Miss M. E. Neal, our state corresponding secretary, has lately been bereft of her mother. Our prayers and sympathies are hers.

Press superintendent, Mrs. Ella Benjamin, Ocala, reports: "Large number of comfort rolls and literature for soldiers sent to Tampa, also to Fernandina for a like purpose."

This union contributed five dollars to Temple fund, and held a public meeting which added new members.

St. Augustine, always wide awake and progressive, is actively pushing the work along. They have been all summer long "heart and hand" in the work for the soldiers; have earned funds for the Temple and renewed subscriptions to School Physiology Journal, with which their teachers in all schools in the county are supplied. Miss Willard's birthday was sweetly observed at the home of President Mrs. Rainey. Miss M. C. Reynolds, superintendent of press, is a model in that capacity, keeping a column in home paper supplied with W. C. T. U. notes, served in attractive manner, at once forcible and readable. Before I essay another letter to THE UNION SIGNAL, my Florida unions, I beg you will all send me an item of news. What have you done, what are you doing?

Mrs. Alice C. Brown is now acting president of Florida W. C. T. U. until our annual state convention which will occur in April. Mrs. Brown's address is Sanford, Fla.

MRS. ANNIE L. WILLSON, president of the fifth district, has just filled engagements with a number of the unions in her district, and reports progress in W. C. T. U. work and an advance all along the line. Many of the unions give evidence of healthy spiritual vigor, and are extending their efforts into other departments of work not heretofore taken up.

The friends of Sabbath observance in this section are determined to zealously defend the sanctity of the day of rest. The fifth was the banner district of the state last year, and it bids fair to retain the honors.

During the past six months four new unions have been organized, with encouraging interest in the cause at other points in the district. Ninety pledge signers have been secured.

Mrs. Willson adds that "she is praying for consecrated laborers to engage in the temperance cause," and promises her best efforts in the field allotted to her.

Mrs. A. E. Gooch, president of the fourth district, was disappointed in securing an organizer early in the season. Afterwards the summer's heat and the quarantine prevented further effort at Pleasant Hill, consequently very little work has been accomplished in the fourth district.

Kansas.

ENTHUSIASTIC conventions in all the seven congressional districts were a good forecast of the annual state convention which the Kansas W. C. T. U. held at Horton, Oct. 19-21, which in every way came up to expectations, barring the snow-storm which got there a few days ahead; but with the open homes and an untiring reception committee looking after every need, any discomfort was forgotten.

The beautiful Newman M. E. church was opened for the sessions. All day of the 18th the ante-executive session had been holding. In calling this twentieth annual meeting to order, the president used a gavel which had been given her for the purpose by the students of Campbell University, in which she teaches; the little instrument of authority was made of osage orange, to represent, as they had explained, the "growing and staying qualities of the Kansas W. C. T. U.," and when the very complete reports were heard, this pleasant little compliment was seen to have been a very safe prophecy.

The opening devotions were conducted by Rev. Mollie Sibbitt of Hoisington, late of Colorado, who at a later session was introduced as a woman citizen who had voted for president of the United States. All of the general officers, six district presidents and a number of superintendents answered the roll-call. Though the districts of eastern Kansas in which section the entertaining city lies, were the better represented, there were good delegations from all. The reports by districts, which were called after organization, were listened to with interest. The western districts, which long have had so much unorganized territory, came this year, after Mrs. Helen D. Harford's famous organizing tour, bearing many sheaves; the rejoicing was general, since "we all belong." A healthy advance in the work was seen in every report. A touching praise service and welcome to new unions was conducted by Mrs. L. B. Smith; several of the new workers being present were introduced and saluted. The reports of officers gave such cheer as only good news can; three hundred unions, including ninety-eight new ones, a membership of 3,000, forty Loyal Temperance Legions, a thousand strong, a good financial statement, the official organ practically self-supporting, a paid up increase of five hundred and twenty-five members, are a few of the items received with applause; especially this victory for which the state officers had zealously worked, that Kansas had come up to the honor line in the National.

The president in her annual message seemed to leave nothing out which could inspire hope, and move to more zealous labor for the cause. Every state superintendent was heard from, either bringing or sending a report; great effort has been made to bring up all lines, and much good work has been done—perhaps most notably in work among miners, among soldiers and sailors and in the Sunday-school; five thousand pledge cards festooned about the spacious room as decorations, were evidence of part of the zealous work done in this department. A large amount of department literature was given out, and much of it mailed at once to district superintendents.

Wednesday evening was a season of many happy welcomes and fraternal greetings, well interlarded with good music by the city choirs; after these came the presentation of the premium banner to the third district for the largest number of signed pledge cards, 1,200 in all. Mrs. Reed, superintendent of Sunday-school department, took the opportunity to emphasize this work to the public.

The annual election on Thursday morning was most harmonious—the present board, Mrs. Ella W. Brown, president; Mrs. L. B. Smith, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Jessie Maxey, recording secretary; Mrs. E. P. Hutchinson, treasurer, being re-elected.

Our visitors from the National, Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, Mrs. Caroline Woodward, Mrs. Helen D. Harford, at home in Kansas, were all warmly welcomed. Rev. Anna Ray, of New Hampshire, temporarily located at Washington, Kan., was present and entered heartily into the convention work. Greetings at intervals were had from ministers, teachers and other friends. A greeting by telegram was received from the Synodical Missionary Society in session at Holton, and one returned to them. A greeting was voted and ordered sent to the president of the sixth district, detained by sickness at home.

Mrs. Beauchamp's great address on "Does it Pay?" was given on Thursday evening to a crowded house, which largely seemed to agree with her on the unprofitableness of the liquor traffic to the church. Music on this evening was furnished by the Conservatory of Music of Campbell University. Mrs. Mary E. Haines gave stereopticon views of "our workers."

On Friday, at 3 P. M., the convention adjourned to the Opera House, where the Holton L. T. L., having come in a body with their superintendent and pianist, held a model L. T. L. meeting and gave an exhibition of their work, winding the Maypole and other of their beautiful drills. In the evening a class of twelve Seniors was graduated; these exercises under the direction of Mrs. L. C. Zehner, state superintendent of this department. Hon. John McDonald followed with an excellent address on "Eighteen years of prohibition, and after?" The president, after gracefully thanking the many promoters of this successful meeting, declared it adjourned.

In resolutions, Kansas loyally indorsed the action of the National executive committee in the Temple interests. A good plan of work and resolutions of local interest were adopted.

Maine.

THE space granted to one state would be far too limited to adequately describe the feast of good things enjoyed at our annual convention held in Bangor: the hospitable homes of the "Queen City;" the church beautifully decorated by Mr. Sickinger, a friendly florist, and the ladies of the union and the Crusade; the kindly greetings on behalf of the city, the churches, the Y. M. C. A., and the hostess societies of which Mrs. H. A. Whitman and Mrs. L. J. Whielden are presidents, the earnest devotional meetings and the presence of such workers as Mrs. Hoffman, Miss Anna Gordon, Mrs. Leonora Lake, Mrs. Rice, Mrs. Bailey and Miss Elizabeth Yates, rendered our twenty-fourth convention one of the most notable in our history.

The response to the cordial greetings was given by one of the ten original members of the Maine W. C. T. U. who were present—Mrs. Gertrude Stevens Leavitt, who as a tiny girl, accompanied her mother to Old Orchard on the memorable day when Frances Willard organized the state union.

Mrs. Stevens' address was, as always, inspiring and hopeful, though it was evident to all what the going away of the two great temperance leaders had meant to her. The reports of the corresponding secretary and treasurer and of the department superintendents showed a large amount of work accomplished and many victories for righteousness during the year, including the removal of one of the judges of the supreme court.

In connection with the report of the press superintendent a Neal Dow Souvenir Album, containing eighty-five articles furnished by the press superintendents to the newspapers of the state in observance of the birthday anniversary last March, and eighty-one photographs illustrating the history, scenery and industries of Maine, was presented to Mrs. Stevens.

The chairman of the prohibitory enforcement committee of the Dexter union, graphically portrayed the heroic work of the women in ridding their town of liquor-selling hotels.

A tender and beautiful memorial service was conducted by Mrs. H. C. Hall with appropriate tribute to our beloved National leader, and the father of prohibition, as well as to those of our own number who have passed away during the year.

Of the Y hour in charge of the Y secretary, too much can not be said, for the way in which the earnest young women acquitted themselves showed that there will be no falling off of interest in the days to come.

Mrs Hoffman's address on the subject "Is Man More Degenerate than Woman, and Why?" occupied one evening and clearly set forth the respective faults of a ruling and a servile class. Before Mrs. Hoffman, Miss Gordon spoke briefly, but in her peculiarly pleasing way.

On the last morning came the election of officers, the only change being the choice of Miss Cornelia M. Dow to succeed Mrs. Sarah L. Cram, for many years the faithful and beloved corresponding secretary. The saddest moment of the convention came when Mrs. Stevens, having been unanimously elected to her twenty-first year as president, all eyes filled with tears at the thought of the telegram which for many years had been sent Miss Willard at this time. But the recording secretary, Miss Farwell, quietly suggested that after all the heavenly message could travel much faster than the earthly, and Anna Gordon presented Mrs. Stevens a bouquet of fragrant white roses from herself, so she said, and from the one of whose beautiful life all were thinking. These the recipient placed above the portrait of Miss Willard.

FOR YOU

FOR that sour stomach use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they digest the food before it has time to sour, ferment and poison the blood.

FOR loss of appetite, take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because food promptly digested creates a natural desire for MORE.

FOR loss of flesh, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; they increase flesh in the only common sense way, that is, by digesting flesh-forming food, and assisting the weak stomach in disposing of it.

FOR gas in stomach and bowels, causing distress, belching and headaches, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; always indicated in such cases.

FOR palpitation of the heart use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets because this symptom in nine out of ten cases is caused from a disordered stomach.

FOR impure blood use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; pure blood can only result from wholesome food thoroughly digested.

FOR every form of weak digestion and stomach trouble (except cancer of the stomach) Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest, most natural, most successful cure. No patent medicine, but composed of digestive acids, pepsin, bismuth, Golden Seal and similar valuable stomach remedies.

During the three days of the session many visitors were introduced, including a fraternal delegate from the United Kingdom Alliance of Great Britain, Mr. Smith, accompanied by Mrs. Smith, and numerous clergymen of Bangor and the surrounding towns.

Near the close of the last afternoon, the department reports, report of resolutions committee and other business being completed, a new feature was introduced. Each county delegation gathered in the front of the church, near the piano, and rendered a county song composed by one of its members. Much merriment resulted, as the songs were of all varieties—some humorous, some declarations of principles, and one a tribute to Mrs. Stevens from her native, Piscataquis, county.

The exercises of the last evening were held in the city hall, which was filled by one of the largest audiences ever gathered in Maine to listen to a temperance address. The speaker was Mrs. Leonora Lake, of St. Louis, vice-president of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America, who delivered one of the finest addresses with which our state convention has ever been favored. A pleasant incident at its close was the presentation to Mrs. Lake of a bouquet of choice flowers by Mr. O'Donnell, president of the C. T. A. U. of Maine.

THE twenty-third annual convention of the state union was held in Chestertown, Kent county, October 11, 12 and 13, with the president, Mrs. M. R. Haslup, presiding. The meetings were held in the Methodist Episcopal church, with the exception of that of the last evening, which was held in the Methodist Protestant church. These beautiful church buildings, the graceful decorations, the fine organs and inspiring music and the generous welcomes of pastors and people made the best possible setting for the work and the workers of the convention.

Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman and Miss Frances Ensign were present, and added immeasurably to the profit and pleasure of the meeting. The attendance of officers, vice-presidents, superintendents, other ex-officio members and of delegates was excellent, the business meetings were remarkably well attended by outsiders, and the evening meetings were crowded to overflowing. On the evening Mrs. Hoffman spoke, the M. P. church was opened for those who could not get into the other church, and exercises were held there, closing with a brief address by Mrs. Hoffman, who had kindly volunteered to do double duty. A number of those at this meeting were members of the union who had given up their places at the regular meeting in favor of those who had never heard Mrs. Hoffman. It wasn't easy to do, but desire for "the greatest good to the greatest number," inspired them to the sacrifice.

The program for the opening meeting differed materially from those of the several conventions immediately preceding this, and the change proved most agreeable. The difference lay in the number of addresses of welcome and responses, the program committee in this instance having arranged for but two, one from the president of Washington college, Dr. Reid, and one from the local president, Mrs. Vannort, with a welcome song from some of the little ones of the Loyal Temperance Legion.

Among the business proceedings outside of the usual routine were the following: An amendment to the constitution whereby county secretaries of the Young Woman's Branch are to be included among the ex-officio members of the annual meeting of the state union; also an amendment allowing the Loyal Legion representation in the convention for each ten dollars contributed to the state treasury during the year; the endorsement of the action of the general officers and the executive committee of the National W. C. T. U., at their meeting held in Chicago, July 15, 1898, in regard to the Temple, the decision of the convention to adopt as the special work of the new year the education of public sentiment in the importance of securing for the state a law to prevent the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, that to this end every department bend its energies directly, and other temperance and religious bodies be invited to coöperate. The petition against the army canteen was presented and endorsed by a rising vote, and the ministers of the gospel present kindly consented to present the petition at their next Sabbath service.

The reports of superintendents, which were unusually concise and direct, showed that admirable work had been done in many directions, and that better things in several lines had been planned for the future. After due consideration the department of systematic giving was included in the evangelistic department; the department of securing homes for homeless children was dropped, as other agencies are doing able work along this line, and the department of medal contests was adopted.

Memorial services were held at noon of the second day, presided over by Miss Cathcart, the state treasurer. They were impressive and most appropriate. Mrs. Hoffman spoke tenderly and most effectively of our beloved leader, whose picture held a prominent place on the platform throughout the entire convention, and others also spoke loving words of this "incomparable one."

Among the many pleasing incidents of the convention was the presentation to the union of a new and beautiful state banner, the gift of Montgomery county union. The old banner, tattered and torn from its journeyings to state, National and county conventions and to some fairs and expositions, will be kept among the most precious possessions of the state union.

The consensus of opinion regarding this convention is that it was "a convention of encouragement," characterized by a spirit of unity and harmony and a high purpose to "move on to victory."

Publisher's Notes.

The Frances Townsley Calendar for 1899 will be ready early in November. It is composed of a sentiment for each day in the coming year, the material being garnered at the request of friends from Rev. Miss Townsley's sermons, lectures, and addresses, with a few entire poems of the author published in such standard publications as The Youth's Companion, the New York Independent, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Baptist Standard, etc. Miss Townsley is a National evangelist of the W. C. T. U. and at present is pastor of the Baptist church, of Vassar, Mich. The calendar is gotten up on neat paper with clear type, arranged for daily use, and the proceeds are to be devoted to Christian and reform work. There are many suggestions to young men and maidens; some to the aged; and not a few have felt that the preparation of this souvenir might be a means of real good to those who shall own a copy. It is expressly suitable as a Christmas gift. For terms address

It is a solo with chorus, tender, stirring and martial, printed in sheet form and has a lovely half-tone of Miss Willard on the cover. Price 10 cents per copy, mailed postpaid, 4 copies for 30 cents. The Bible Reading for December considers the question of "Woman's Right to Prophesy," and is written by the Rev. Edith Hill-Booker, one of our National evangelists. The subject is discussed under five heads, viz.: 1. The fundamental idea of prophecy; 2. Woman's right foretold; 3. Her right exercised; 4. Examples; 5. Apparent prohibitions; and concludes with the significant passage from Psalms 68: 11 (R. V.): "The Lord giveth the word, the women that publish the tidings are a great host."

Price, single copies per year, $.12. Ten copies per year to one address, $1.

In the Responsive Readings for the month of December Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake talks about rescue work. She tells how it came to be a part of W. C. T. U. effort, and briefly outlines the history of the department. She suggests practical methods of work for local unions, emphasizing particularly its preventive features.

Price, single copies per year, $.10. Thirteen copies per year to one address, $1.

Our friends who order small amounts of literature, promising to remit by return mail, often stating they do not know the price, etc., can not understand the annoyance of carrying these small memorandum accounts or they would be more prompt in remitting.

"On Heights of Power." Music by Lady Henry Somerset. Words by Frances E. Willard.

"Lady Henry Somerset has set to music the Memorial Hymn, by Frances E. Willard, and the song only requires to be known in order to become very popular. The melody is sweet, tuneful, and attractive, and marked with considerable expression, rendering the words most effective. It opens with a short symphony, and concludes with a chorus in four parts. The compass is well within the reach of the average singer. It ought, therefore, to have a wide sale among local temperance choirs. It was sung with marked effect at the British Women's Temperance Association's annual meeting, at Queen's Hall, and is, we are sure, likely to achieve a wide sale."

The above notice from an English paper will be read with interest by American vocalists and white-ribboners, and as copies will be in great demand, the W. T. P. A. have ordered a supply from the London publishers, which will be on sale in about three weeks. Price, single copy, 50 cents.

We are glad to send sample copies of THE UNION SIGNAL and Young Crusader for free distribution at conventions, but from friends who do not even send stamps to cover postage, we hope for some especial effort to secure subscriptions both to the official organ and to the young people's interesting monthly.

Since the close of our famous Introductory Sale of the only genuine ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY, nearly two years ago, we have been fairly besieged by requests, from all over the United States and Canada, to make a special, low-priced edition of that greatest of all reference libraries, and thus place it within the reach of people in moderate or even poor circumstances. Such a course would have compelled a cheapening of either materials or workmanship, which we have not deemed wise—not even in so worthy a cause. Nor could we afford to make an open offer at a sweeping reduction in the price of a gigantic work, like this, costing more than $750,000, to recover which investment will require many years of constant selling at regular prices. But, yielding at last to the irresistible pressure, we now propose to celebrate the Christmas season of 1898 by distributing just 1,000 sets of our world famous Dictionary and Cyclopædia at less than one-quarter the prices at which the genuine edition is now being sold every day. These books will be taken from our regular stock, latest revision. Paper, printing, binding, illustrations and contents precisely identical with our regular $40 to $70 sets, except that some of the bindings are very slightly worn or defaced, leather corners a trifle crooked, possibly scratched here and there by careless handling. "I HAVE seven good reasons for voting for that temperance law," said an old farmer to a lawyer who was plying him hard for his support. "What are they?" asked the nominee of the traffic. "Four sons and three daughters," was the response.

Save the Pennies.

Few people realize the value made and saved by buying family supplies in quantities. More dollars are lost each year by hand-to-mouth policy than most persons are aware. We do not consider the cost each year for any one article of daily use in the home; the item of Soap in a year counts not a little! Did you ever figure up how much? Try it, and learn how much your Soap costs you in one year; you will be surprised at the amount thus paid out. The Larkin Soap Company tell our subscribers how to save money in the purchase of this household necessity; not only do they give a very large box of the best Soaps, but additional value in a beautiful, useful premium. The "Factory to Family" plan of this Company, though unique, is none the less wonderful in the great values given. Many youths and children have earned a $10.00 Larkin Premium by selling several boxes among neighbors and friends, thereby gaining their first knowledge of practical business. That the Company have faith in their Soaps giving satisfaction, is evidenced by their offer of thirty days' trial of goods before you pay the bill.

Twenty-fifth Annual Convention

National W. C. T. U., St. Paul, Minnesota.

Memorial.

FRIDAY MORNING.

BESIDES going on record as the silver anniversary of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Convention of 1898 will be remembered as the great Memorial Convention of our organization. Called to order at 9: 30 on the morning of November 11, it fittingly opened with a prayer and consecration service, conducted by the National superintendent of evangelistic work, Miss Elizabeth Greenwood.

Upon the platform were the National officers and other leaders, including Mrs. A. O. Rutherford, president of the Dominion of Canada, Miss Lottie Wiggins, of Toronto, Mrs. E. D. Bell, secretary of Manitoba W. C. T. U., Miss Lilian Phelps, preacher and lecturer, also of Canada, and the round-the-world missionaries, Misses Vincent and Cummins, of Australia.

An entertainment in the People's church on Thursday evening gave opportunity for the decorating committee to show its heroic qualities by building out the stage, removing seats, introducing reporters' tables and all of the paraphernalia of a great Convention during the hours of the night and the early morning. Beautiful things were added during the day and every day. The effect was kaleidoscopic. Draperies, vases, roses, banners and what-not seemed to appear as by magic and fit into the ever-changing view as an integral part of the whole. The harmony of the setting of one of our National Conventions is marvelous. It is seldom that the most æsthetic taste is offended, and many times at St. Paul we heard the words, "How beautiful!"

The stately white satin banners of the National, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Louisiana, Minnesota, the superintendents' and others stood out conspicuously upon lofty standards, or hung from balustrades, while bannerets, curious and interesting, rounded out the variegated picture around the organ loft, the gallery and the walls. A large pulpit chair near the center of the platform draped with the white-ribbon star-spangled banner and magnificent white chrysanthemums tied with broad white ribbon told the story of our loved and lost, while idealized pictures of Miss Willard and other promoted ones carried the mind away to the heavenly home and the heavenly host. Lifting our eyes from these to the choir rail, we beheld in silver letters on a white satin ground the words, "How beautiful it is to be with God."

Led by Mrs. Frances Graham, of New York, the Convention sang, "Jesus, I my cross have taken." Miss Greenwood read the 121st Psalm, and aptly remarked that this Convention was "compassed by a cloud of witnesses" led by our Chieftain. After singing, "Come, thou Fount of every blessing," verses of Scripture were repeated, first by those upon the platform, then by women on the floor. Mrs. Graham then sang, "In the secret of His presence," sentence prayers were offered, and this helpful service closed with the singing by the Convention of "Draw me nearer."

Mrs. Stevens invited all Crusaders to the platform. Forty-three responded. Then in a voice trembling with emotion she said:

We sigh that another hand than hers has let fall the gavel; that another voice must call to order this Convention. It is well, indeed, that we have had a consecration service. It has drawn us nearer to God and to her. It is well, too, that now with these Crusaders on the platform we may together read the Crusade Psalm—that psalm so full of hope and courage. So with hearts uplifted, thinking of her, we will read responsively. And I will ask Miss Gordon to come and stand here with us.

Crusaders and Convention read the verses alternately, the Crusade hymn was sung, and Mrs. Clark, president of Ohio, the Crusade state, led in prayer, the Crusaders remaining standing.

Then came roll-call and the appointment of committees by the Chair as follows:

Credentials—Mrs. K. L. Stevenson, Massachusetts; Mrs. Ella Brown, Kansas; Mrs. M. M. Andrews, Connecticut.

Courtesies—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, New York; Miss Katherine Pettit, Kentucky; Mrs. Soulé, Minnesota.

Telegrams—Mrs. Lucie B. Tyng, Illinois; Mrs. Olive Pond Amies, Massachusetts.

Publications—Mrs. Grow, Mrs. Ella Boole, Dr. Louise Purington.

Memorial Service.

MRS. STEVENS: This hour always given to the annual address of one who "allured to brighter worlds above has led the way," will to-day be given to our memorial service. Let us sing "How firm a foundation," a hymn which she loved and we all love.

After the singing Miss Greenwood read Rev. 7:9–17, and prayed. Mrs. Graham sang "On Heights of Power," Miss Willard's own words, to which the music was composed by Lady Henry Somerset for this occasion and, said Mrs. Stevens, to this music it will be sung hereafter. The latter then read the Scripture texts given on the upper margin of the program page—"Ye have not passed this way heretofore." (Joshua 3: 4.) "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." (Psa. 23: 4.) And from the lower margin of program page these words of Miss Willard: "And best of all the hand of Him whose Gospel has lifted us up into heavenly places in Christ Jesus, of Him who was a brother to the Marys, and who, in His hour of mortal agony, did not forget His mother, that pierced hand leads the way."

"The name that leads the memorial list," she said, "is that of one who said on February 17, 'How beautiful it is to be with God.' Mrs. Forbes, of Connecticut, who is one of our oldest state presidents in point of service will speak for the eastern states."

[Our readers will understand that the limitations of space prevent giving the beautiful memorial addresses entire.]

MRS. FORBES, Connecticut: It is a very precious and yet a very sad privilege to be permitted to speak here of our promoted leader. From only one of these Conventions that I have attended during the last fifteen years has the dear one been absent from us, and then we knew she was to return; she was across the sea. But to-day we look upon this vacant chair and we realize in our hearts that she will not come to us, but that we shall go to her. In this very brief time that is allotted to me, I can best speak of her and of her great influence which has gone out into the world under four heads.

First, she was called; second, she was consecrated; third, she was committed; and fourth and last, she is crowned. She was called to this work, when at her mother's knee in the quiet home circle she was imbibing those elements of character which were to make her the wonderful woman that she was. Then she was consecrated to the work when she took the motto, "My life is a vow." From that time she consecrated herself not only to the Lord and His work, but to the special work to which she gave herself. She was committed to the work. To her by your votes, dear sisters, you gave for nineteen years your confidence and love as she stood at the head of this great organization, and to-day whatever there is of power, whatever there is of influence, whatever there is of success in this work, is largely attributable, under God, to this woman, whose clear brain, whose loving heart, whose great sympathies have gone out into all the world.

Then, friends, she is crowned. Yes, to-day she is crowned. "How beautiful it is to be with God." She knows it all now. She is here with us to-day; we feel it in our hearts. The word that I want to leave with you, dear friends, is that we who are to follow her so very soon, may, when we depart from this world, feel the same joy that it was to her to go on to that which is beyond in the blessedness of Christ.

MRS. NARCISSA WHITE-KINNEY, of Oregon, spoke in behalf of our comrades on the Pacific coast; she said: Miss Willard organized, I believe, all the state unions on the Pacific coast, and when the news came of her departure to the other world, so great was the mourning all along the coast that those outside of our ranks said as in the days of old, "Behold, how they mourn her," and it brought to our ranks more than had been brought even in her lifetime. We have all praised her as our splendid orator, our statesmanlike legislator, our matchless leader, but I tell you, my friends, I think one of the most remarkable things in this remarkable woman was her insight, with which she could detect the latent talents and powers of those with whom she came in contact, and her divine desire to make each one of us live mentally, as well as morally and spiritually, up to our highest possibilities. There came to me a sentence in a private letter from her some years ago that has done more to strengthen and brighten my life in all its various relations with humanity than any other sentence she ever uttered. It was after I had gone to the far Pacific coast as a missionary from the National union. I had been absent an entire year, was hungry for our home folks, and I met Miss Willard at the Lake Bluff convocation. It was a very busy time and she only gave me a tender greeting and passed on about her work. But my heart hungered for more. I was disappointed, and so when I went to my home, and out of the depths of my wounded affections, I wrote to her saying: "Dear Miss Willard, have I offended you in any way? You seemed cool to me at that convention." And I received in return the first and only curt letter that I ever received from her pen, and it said, "My dear friend, I was not offended, I was simply very busy and crowded with my duties. That love is comparatively worthless that cannot trust." And I tell you, friends, if that sentence were written in letters of gold above every home to-day all this earth would be brighter for it.

MRS. ELLIS, New Jersey: In behalf of the board of superintendents, these women who have been helped and enthused and inspired by the life and the confidence and the love and the inspiration of our departed Chieftain, I have the privilege of speaking this morning. Up to 1879 the work of the department was placed in the hands of standing committees, and at the suggestion of a friend that there should be specialists or superintendents appointed to fill these departments, Miss Willard readily grasped the idea and the departments were formed.

Miss Willard, more than almost any one else I think living during the past generation, helped to bridge over the chasm between North and South. When she was down in Atlantic City, Miss Gordon told me that after she had made her addresses in the evening, she would ask those who desired to become identified with the union to come forward and she would pin the white ribbon upon them. And they came, thousands of them, and she would shake hands with every one till that poor little hand became so tired and swollen, and when they said, "Miss Willard, do not do that, it is giving out so much of your reserve strength," she replied, "Why, honey, they want me to take them by the hand," and so she did it.

When I stood in the hall of legislation last winter down at Washington, and heard those men, irrespective of section or party, standing loyal and true for this flag that we love, it seemed to me that I could see Frances Willard in that first convention of the South down in Nashville, when there was not a church in that city that would open its doors to this National gathering until after her address, that was given as only Miss Willard could give one, and then twenty pastors of that city came forward and offered their churches, and that night when the governor and other high officials were upon the platform and dear Miss Willard was standing under that flag, the governor said, "Madam, we welcome you as representative of the South as well as of the North."

MRS. MARION H. DUNHAM, Iowa:

"And the stately ships go on
To their haven under the hill;
But O for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still!"

We mourn her to-day, but the great, busy, wicked world halted as never before and realized that it had lost one of its greatest citizens when our peerless leader, Frances Willard, went home. She was the rarest soul that ever lived. With the simplicity of a child and the brain of a statesman, she did more for the world than any statesman that ever lived, for statesmen ever work for their own nation and their material interests, and Frances Willard set in motion in fifty nations of the world the forces which are stronger than all other forces for uplifting and righteousness—the forces of love and the forces of love of service. Her heart was so great that it held all humanity, and yet she never failed to realize the need of each individual heart with which she came in contact and responded to that need. She was a reformer unique in this, that she gave the weight of her whole influence not to one reform merely, but to every reform which would uplift humanity.

Loving her home as other women love their homes, she left it during the best years of her life that she might help to make other homes happier. With no child of her own to love, she did more than any other one has done to make the world a safer and a happier place for our children. With great ambitions, as she herself has told us, she devoted them all to the cause to which she gave her life, and with gifts and graces that would have made her the leader and the center of cultured circles, she chose to ally herself with the earnest men and women whose greatest passion was for justice and whose creed was self-sacrifice.

MRS. THURMAN, Michigan, spoke for the colored people: I hardly feel that it is safe, she said, for me to attempt to say much in regard to the one that above all others in the ranks of this mighty host of consecrated womanhood we loved most. I wish I could tell you how much she did in the colored work that I represent in order that it might be possible to bring to the ten thousand men and women of my own race this gospel of temperance, this gospel of purity, this gospel of good will toward all men. It is a pleasant remembrance to me that near the close of the life of our Chieftain, she was permitted again to come into the South, to come not only in touch with the great organizations, but to reach out a helping hand to the hundreds and thousands of boys and girls that were gathered together in the schools and colleges and churches of my own race. We, too as a race have shed tears of sorrow; we too feel that we have lost a friend true and tried; we too have lost an earthly leader whose place to-day can not be filled by another in the same way.

MRS. HELEN L. BULLOCK, New York, on behalf of organizers: The dense clouds which have hung over our great organization during the past year have extended to every land where our little badge of white ribbon is known, and yet the eye of the true Christian can always see the silver lining which the loving Saviour gently lifts to our longing gaze. And so it is now. It is a selfish sorrow to mourn continually for one who could say as she was about to enter into His presence, "How beautiful it is to be with God." The great heart of Frances Willard went out to all the suffering ones of earth with such a longing desire to comfort and to help, that she loved with a peculiar tenderness all who were willing to make sacrifices to aid in this great work for the uplifting of the fallen and the protection of the home. No one knew better than she the trials, perplexities and hardships of the organizers. She had walked these same paths strewn with roses and thorns, and her loving interest and her kind words of commendation and encouragement always followed us wherever we went. To me her letters, although written in the rush of a busy life, were an inspiration and a benediction, and I know they were to every member of our board.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, Chicago: From an acquaintance of twenty-five years, I will say here that Frances Willard followed Christ the closest of any person I ever knew. I have only time to say a word and I will take up two points wherein she followed so closely her Master—her humility and her love for humanity. Christ humbled Himself and became obedient unto the Father, and came into the world and suffered death on the cross; He was despised and rejected of men, a Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, and he was so humble throughout it all. And so with our dear Frances. What humility she always showed with all her greatness! She was just like a little child, so sweet and humble, and she would say after a lecture, "Well, Tillie, how did I do? There are some things that I may have said that were not right, won't you tell me?" And then in her treatment of others she would always ask your opinion and say was she just right in these things.

And then she was so ready to give up the things of the world for the things of Christ. He left the Father's glory and the Father's home; she left her home, her beloved mother, she left the great university that she loved and where she was a leading educator. She left all this; she heard the cry of the perishing, and she said, "I will go down and help them," and she turned her back on all ambitions—and she was an ambitious woman, too. Did she go for money—no, she received none. She went about the streets of Chicago as the first president of the Central Union many times with wornout shoes, many times hungry because she had not money and did not want to say anything to others about it. We found it out at last, it was not that way long, but she was willing, with her splendid talents, to take the humblest place that she might help others.

MRS. FRANCES J. BARNES, New York, on behalf of the Y's: No young woman was ever welcomed into a blessed service for Christ and for humanity by a more gentle and winsome woman than I was brought into this work by our blessed leader. If I attempted to speak of the love and of all the days and the hours of blessed intercourse, I could not keep my voice, dear friends, and so I will turn to one phase which has not been mentioned, but which we miss so much and always shall—her delicious witticisms, her quaint humor all through these wonderful gatherings. And several pictures have been passing before my mind this morning. I remember so well when she first came to our village home. It was the day before the Fourth of July, and she said, "What are your temperance women doing?" I said, "Well, we have a cold water army." "Well, have they got a banner?" "No, we have not a banner," so with the best tinsel paper we had and with the materials just at hand, we made our banner. Then we gathered next morning down at headquarters, and my mother was there in her Quaker bonnet, and Miss Willard, and the boys came and the girls came, and the boys did not want the girls to march with them in the street, but the girls had come out with their white dresses and sashes, and one boy was in the street beating a drum, and Miss Willard said, "Come on, Saint Letitia." So they linked arms and marched down the street, and then the boys and girls had to follow and a colored boy and a little English boy helped to carry the banner, and when the village people looked out and saw "Saint Letitia," a Quaker lady, following a drum and banner, they wondered what had come to pass.

Then I think of her one evening at New York, just after she had printed her "Woman and Temperance"—and we know how much praise she gave to all of us in that book—I said to her, "Oh, my dear Miss Willard, I do not know what to do; I do not know whether to suppress the whole edition, or to try to live up to the ideals which you set there for us." And she said, "My dear, I think you will find one just as hard to do as the other."

And just the last few days when I sent a message saying, "Please, Anna, tell her that I do not come into the room because I do not want to take a breath of the oxygen she ought to have." And she smiled so gently at Anna and said, "Tell dear Fannie I would not mind if she were in when I shuffle off this mortal coil." Quaint, sweet humor at the very last. Oh, there never was a personality like hers! But the Maker of us all has something for us to do. By and by, like her, we shall see our Pilot face to face, but, oh, dear young women, may your hearts be filled with the love that passeth knowledge, and may it be said that this army of God is the most blessed army in all the world, because it dares to confront all the evils that stand against the coming of His kingdom, and may every message that she has ever written, and every word that she has ever spoken come to your hearts, bidding you to march with us until we join her some glad day.

MISS KATE LUNDEN, of New Jersey, representing the Scandinavians: Great characters erect their own memorials, not of perishable marble, but of noble, enduring, immortal deeds. Thus did Frances E. Willard build hers through years of sacrificing toil, through self-denial, through suffering perhaps, and the hand of time can never touch that indestructible structure. She wrote her own epitaph, not on fading pages, but in purified, grateful hearts, and that inscription will never be erased. She wrote it not in one language only, but she wrote it with the finger of love in the universal tongue, which is understood by humanity at large.

You who have known her under different circumstances may speak of her as the peerless leader, the matchless orator, the tireless worker, the invaluable friend and companion. To us she will always be the friend of the stranger, the sympathizer with the lonely, the discouraged—the lover of humanity who recognized no conditions, or nationalities, or race, or color, or language; whose creed was love, and whose heart was large enough to embrace the whole world, and so on behalf of the struggling, unnoticed ones whom she has helped and loved and shielded, on behalf of those, whether here or across the far away seas, whom she has bound with ties of love and common interests in one common sisterhood, on behalf of them as well as on my own behalf, I lay my humble tribute of love at the Chieftain's shrine.

MRS. S. M. I. HENRY beautifully voiced the tribute of the National evangelists in the following original poem:

In the beauty of the lilies,
Like her Lord's her life began,
The same light within her bosom
That He wore as Son of Man;
The same mission to the sinning
On her tender heart was laid,
And she shared the love that answered
When He cried, and was afraid.

In the beauty of the lilies
Walked her soul in spotless white,
Brightening a world of shadows
With its clear, reflected light.
Where the shadows fell to blackness,
Where the ooze of sin and crime
Was the deepest, there her courage
Made her motherhood sublime.

Then in response to Mrs. Stevens' request, Miss Gordon came forward and spoke a few closing words in memory of the beloved leader.

MISS GORDON: Madam President and dear sisters, I am glad to say just one word. I would like to pronounce her dear name at this memorial service in your sympathetic presence—Frances E. Willard. And I would like to accompany it with a smile and a word of profound gratitude to God that He let me love her. And we are all going to show how much we love her and how much we want to meet her again, by the earnest, devoted work we shall do for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, for which she laid down her life. You have noticed the sunlight; it has crept around and around until at last it rested upon this chair, and everything about Frances Willard was light and love. So, truly, love's light illumines the pathway she trod, and we can see to follow her as she followed Christ.

The Convention then sang one verse of "Lead, Kindly Light," and Mrs. Stevens read the next name on the list of promoted ones, Mary Towne Burt.

MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE spoke in her memory: We are reminded of that incident in French history when the name of a great general was called for a year and a day, that his comrades might have the privilege of standing and with bared heads say, "Died at the post of duty." For twenty-five years, nearly, the roll has been called at the opening of the Convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and when the name of Mary Towne Burt was called, she always responded. But this year, had her name been called, the delegates from New York state could have arisen and said with reverence, "Died at the post of duty." Connected with our organization from the beginning as recording secretary, corresponding secretary of the National, publisher of our official organ, and for sixteen years the beloved and honored president of New York state, hers was a familiar face among us. Our great state is doubly bereaved to-day. And in the midst of our sorrow I did not hear a discouraged word from a single woman. They said, "God called these leaders, and we thank Him for them, but they have left behind them a work for each one of us to do," and I believe that just as in time of need we call upon God to help, so the sorrows of the year have brought the rank and file of our organization to realize their own personal responsibility, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will not die.

MRS. EMILIE D. MARTIN spoke in memory of Madam Demorest: Mrs. Ellen Louise Demorest, acting as vice-president of Sorosis of New York state, received her call and passed on after a lingering sickness. She was treasurer of the National Society for the Protection of the Insane; she was the treasurer of the New York Woman's Medical College; she was editor and successful business woman, and so great, so gracious, so beautiful in character, that she made a large place for women who come after her and will seek to follow her.

Mrs. Martin also spoke a few words in grateful tribute to the Rev. Dr. John Hall, of New York, a staunch friend of the W. C. T. U., and a man, as he himself declared "always open to conviction."

MRS. IDA H. READ, in memory of Mrs. Esther T. Housh: In this hour of tender solemnity, when we speak of our beloved and promoted ones, we find it hard because the tears are so near the surface. This dear sister, who was comrade well beloved to our great leader, who was a National superintendent, and who for seven years was among the officers of the state of Vermont, and led us with gentleness and sweetness and love, we called "Queen Esther," and sometimes we called her "Queenie." She came into our homes and always left a benediction, and our hearts are full of praise that God has been so good to us to give us our beloved Frances Willard and Esther T. Housh and all these other dear ones who have walked so long and patiently in this way that leads to righteousness and heaven.

MRS. BESSIE LAYTHE SCOVELL, in memory of Mrs. H. A. Hobart: My heart is too full to speak many words this morning of our dear friend. I have noticed the glint of the sunshine that has come through the windows and worked itself around on these pictures, and by and by it touched this one down here, and she was president of Minnesota for fifteen years, Harriet A. Hobart. We loved her so well, she built up our work in Minnesota on such strong foundation stones that the work is still going on as she left it.

MRS. DENNEY, of Indiana, in memory of Miss Lodie Reed: I came here this morning to speak of Miss Lodie E. Reed, of Indiana, the woman who for thirteen years was corresponding secretary of that state, for ten years state superintendent of scientific instruction and through her influence perhaps more than that of any other, we secured that law. Governor Matthews presented her with the pen with which he had signed the bill, in honor of her work in securing this legislation, and we know what this law means, not only to Indiana, but to the nation.

Mrs. Stevens spoke in tender memory of the other eighteen comrades and friends who have left us during the year. The Convention sang "In heavenly love abiding." On motion the committee on telegrams was instructed to send a message of greeting to Lady Henry Somerset. A quartette of colored people sang, "Miss Willard at Rest," composed by Mrs. Lisle, a cultured colored woman of St. Paul, and Miss Greenwood pronounced the benediction.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

After Scripture reading and prayer by Mrs. Mildred Dorsey, president of Arkansas, Mrs. C. B. Forbes, of Connecticut, who has served the National Convention so many years in this capacity, was appointed sergeant-at-arms, with Miss Helen Hood, of Illinois, Miss McIntyre, of Minnesota, Mrs. Cochrane, of South Dakota, and Miss Geary, of Indiana, as her assistants. Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, of Maine, was made timekeeper as usual. Then followed the report of the corresponding secretary. We give large space to this report, first, because it is particularly interesting and full of information, and second, because it will be helpful to white-ribboners in getting up their programs for Crusade Day.

Corresponding Secretary's Report.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON: It is a solemn thing to close the record of a quarter-century; a solemn thing to look back upon those years, each one so full of heroic impulse, of sacred toil, of noblest achievement, and to say, "they are gone." One can but feel as if the years themselves had been in some way sentient, and as if we were laying away something in the tomb that had pulsed with radiant life. Tennyson's farewell to a dying year never meant so much to me as now:

"So long as you have been with us
Such joy as you have seen with us,
Old years, ye can not die!"

And in very truth they can not. A year may be indeed a vital thing, but its vitality must depend upon the deeds it records; upon the noble words to which it has given utterance; upon the mighty principles of truth and righteousness which it has freed from the fetters binding them, and to which it has given a more or less adequate expression in law and custom. Viewed by this standard of life, the last quarter-century is one of the most vital things in existence to-day. The eternal years of God belong to it, because it is a part of His own eternity, not merely as a segment of its duration, but as one with its very essence.

Therefore, we must not mourn our twenty-five years as dead; we must see them as eternally alive. Not one deed wrought for righteousness during their busy days has been lost. Not one life which gave itself to our great struggle and labored with patient, earnest toil, that God's kingdom might come and His will be done on earth, has died or can ever die. We err, in our weak, human limitation, when we count the number of those who have "left our work." They have not left it who have been promoted to higher service. "It's the same beautiful world and the same people," said our great leader, as she neared the mystic line between the seen and the unseen, "remember that—it's just the same." She spoke no words more radiant with life and light than these. The human heart is hungering for an assurance of continued life, and of the very same activities, upon a higher plane, and if it be "just the same," what right have we to mourn for or count as lost those who are more truly with us than when the veil of flesh so often hid their real selves? We may count as lost (if we must number our losses) those who have grown weary in the strife; who have sacrificed principle to personal ease or popularity; who have ceased to listen for "Thus saith the Lord," and have heard, instead, "Thus saith policy!" They, indeed, are dead to the higher life of our calling, but our Great-hearts who fell with the armor on, never before were they so truly alive, never, I can but believe, so free to express their inmost selves in deeds of divinest helpfulness. For it is a profound truth, revealed by the highest science, as well as by God's Word, that "blessed are the dead who die in the Lord," and the very innermost core of that blessedness must consist in the fact that, although they rest from their outward labors, 'their works do follow them."

We had hoped that at this, our Crusade anniversary, we should have with us the "good gray heads" of Mother Thompson, Mother Stewart, Mother Wallace, Mrs. George Carpenter Mrs. Esther MacNeil, and the many others so closely allied with the Crusade in its very inception. But, alas, though their spirits remain indomitably young, they find a law in the flesh warring against that law of the spirit of God, which is the law of eternal youth, and therefore they are with us in heart only. Each one, however, has sent loving greetings, and so has a host of Crusaders not enumerated. We rejoice in the knowledge that their thoughts are with us, and we rejoice also that so many who took part in that mightiest movement of modern times are with us in flesh as well as in spirit. We extend to them a heartfelt, glad welcome. Seldom is it given to mortals to see such wondrous results springing from their work, as our Crusade sisters have seen.

They were but instruments played upon by the Master Musician, and they could not know that they were sounding the prelude to that mighty symphony which is yet rising towards God. Each one struck bravely and sweetly her own keynote of service, and, lo, the ages shall listen to the harmony. All hail, brave souls God-called and God-commissioned! It fills one's heart with the deepest thankfulness to be found in the direct line of descent from such an high-priesthood.

That same spirit of revealing which characterized the Crusade has, for the past twenty-five years, been with the organization which claims as its most distinctive honor the fact that it is the "Child of the Crusade." The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is essentially a revealer. It constantly strives to remove from evil the wrappings of obscurity, and in many cases has literally turned the darkness of ignorance into the light of knowledge. It has sought after the wrongs that have needed righting and has not rested content with a mere superficial unveiling, but has in each case striven to reach the bedrock of knowledge. It has sought facts, and side by side with facts it has laid principles and ideals. Hence, it has avoided the two extremes of mere sentimental aspiration and mere depressing knowledge. It could not be pessimistic and believe as it does in God and in divine ideals, neither could it be vaingloriously optimistic and see things as they are. Facts and theories, knowledge and ideals, clear vision and strong faith, God and the enlightened, consecrated human heart make a mighty combination, and just this combination has, with greater or lesser effectiveness, according as we have fulfilled our part of the conditions, been working in the organization since its inception. The results? A band of women gathered from every state in the Union and from almost every nation upon earth, who have not only set their faces as a flint against wrong, but who know the nature of the wrong against which they are battling, whose hearts are tender and whose hands are outstretched in helpfulness, not to the wrong-doer alone, but to every human life. The results? A quickening of conscience in the Christian church and in society as a whole upon the subject of personal total abstinence and of one's duty towards one's neighbor. Compare the drinking habits among respectable people of a quarter of a century ago with those of to-day if you question the assertion.

The results? Laws upon the statute books of every state in our Union, save three, requiring the scientific teaching to the pupils of our public schools of the effects of alcohol and narcotics, and an ever-increasing army of earnest allies in the teachers of our land who are eager to aid in the enforcement of those laws. The results? The raising of the age of protection for our daughters in nearly every state in the Union, and whole floods of light thrown upon the subject of purity in its relation to the home and its relation to the individual. The results? Time and space forbid their enumeration. Listen to the tramp of the three hundred thousand children of the Loyal Temperance Legion as they keep step to the inspiring words of our great leader, "Saloons Must Go." Go into the Sunday-schools of our land where temperance principles are taught; go into the Houses of Refuge where hundreds and hundreds of poor, betrayed girls and heart-broken women have been lifted up into new life; go down into the mines, into our prisons, our jails and our almshouses; up into the lumber camps; into our camps of war and our ships at sea; stop at Castle Garden where our missionary meets the immigrant and puts literature into his hand, which, in many cases, has reached both head and heart; go into the sunny southland and see the noble bands of colored women who are taking up our work and pledging themselves to the redemption of their race from a bondage far worse than slavery; enter our well-nigh numberless gospel temperance and evangelistic meetings in which so many prodigals are turned back to their Father's house; see our brave bands of organizers and evangelists as they go patiently forth on their toilsome errands, daring summer's heat and winter's cold; see how the table of our Lord has been practically freed from the cup which means death; see how the press is responding to the call for a higher expression of the life of the American people; see how art and literature are being purified; principles of mercy taught and peace inculcated; read the gospel of woman's enfranchisement as it is written in literature, upon the pulpits from which she ministers and in the repealing of countless iniquitous laws as well as in the four fair states to which full suffrage has been granted her. Read our advance, as recorded in the treatment of disease without the use of alcohol; read it in the healthful pages of the temperance literature sent forth, and in countless other forms which, for lack of space, cannot be mentioned, if you would know some of the results.

But even in all these you can catch but a faint, fleeting shadow of the real substance, for, like the kingdom of God, of which it is a vital part, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union "cometh not by observation." It is not a thing accomplished, it is the subjective state of mind and soul which must lie back of all accomplishment, and greater than anything it has done or can do must remain the fact that it is: an army of light-bearers; a company of seers; an exponent of the life principle of love wrought out in divinest activities. Who shall set limits to the results flowing from such an organization? What it has accomplished is only the faintest prophecy of what it shall accomplish when once it shall have grasped the full scope of its mission and measured up to the height of its calling.

It is to the immediate past, however, that I must address myself to-day, so much of that past as lies between our last annual Convention and the one which convenes us here. When the W. C. T. U. year 1897–98 shall be questioned as to its distinctive historic event, each white-ribbon heart must answer, the birth into the beyond life of Frances E. Willard. That event is the pivot upon which our year has hung. We can but date every event toward it or from it. It is not that it has meant a paralysis of our effort, for results prove that our efforts have been in no sense remitted, indeed, it sometimes seems as if a new sense of responsibility came upon the entire organization with her going home; it is simply that our hearts went with her through the valley of the shadow in those February days and that all earthly light has been a little dimmed since then, while the heaven-light shines more clearly. I have no eulogy to-day for Frances Willard; you have heard the tender, true words that were spoken in memorial service this morning; each one of you has added some loving, personal recollection as a precious bead to this shining rosary.

The months between the Buffalo Convention and the death of Miss Willard were occupied, so far as the National W. C. T. U. is concerned, with the routine work attendant upon the close of a National Convention, the printing of the Annual Report, the Annual Leaflet and planning the main features of the year's campaign. After the triumphant funeral march across half a continent, which has no parallel in history, was a thing of the past; after we had sufficiently rallied to think of work, our first distinctive act was to send an appeal to the local unions to make March 20, the birthday of General Neal Dow, a special memorial Sunday to Frances Willard, and to send all moneys collected on that day to Miss Cornelia Dow, the custodian appointed by Miss Willard, at the Buffalo Convention, of the Willard fund for retiring the Temple Trust Bonds. The response to this appeal was well-nigh universal; the whole land was belted with memorial meetings and, indeed, March 20 was observed by other countries as well, Lady Henry Somerset having issued a call to the World's Union for its observance.

Next, the General Officers of the National Union sent an official letter to the executive committee urging that in each state systematic effort be undertaken to make the Temple a memorial to Miss Willard. They were encouraged to do this by representations which had been made to them from various sources to the effect that the hearts of the people being filled with sympathy and sorrow because of our great loss, such a movement would meet with a success which could never have attended it before. Results proved that we had greatly overestimated the importance of this wave of feeling, for, in point of fact, when we sought to reduce it to concrete action, it was lamentably wanting in results, and even in Chicago it was impossible to organize such a committee. In several other cities committees were organized, but the hoped-for subscriptions were not forthcoming. Nevertheless, it was an honest effort, honestly made, and, as such, cannot have been wholly lost.

In July, new light having come to the General Officers upon the subject of the Temple in its relation to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, a call was issued, the first time in our history as an organization, for a mid-year meeting of the executive committee. This call was responded to on July 15, by twenty-two members of that committee, and the action taken on that day is already a matter of history. Thus, it will be seen that the Temple has, in one or another form, been the chief object of work at National Headquarters during the year, and it must continue such, even though it be to the detriment of our other lines of work, until some adequate solution of the problem shall be reached. God grant that we may reach it speedily.

And yet, despite this one supreme issue, our other lines of work have been by no means neglected, as the various reports prove. Organizing has been done, under the direction of the National superintendent, in fourteen missionary states and territories, with results which the tabulated statements only feebly make apparent. The organizers will, themselves, tell you of their brave battles. In addition, the state officers, in the majority of states, have most vigorously pushed organization and increase of membership, although in some states opposing causes have been strong enough to largely counteract their efforts. Seven states have made a gain of 500 or more; these are Minnesota, the state which welcomes us to-day; Ohio, the Crusade state; brave Texas; true North Dakota; great-hearted Kansas; sunny Southern California and dear little Indiana, which leads the van with a net gain of more than 1,100.

The National union has sent petitions against the canteen to President McKinley, Secretary Alger and to the commanders of the several camps. It has also sent a letter of thanks to the Czar of Russia for his brave utterances upon the subject of universal disarmament. Another to Admiral Dewey, urging that a cargo of beer be not allowed to unload at Manila; and others to all who could in any way have influence in the dedication of the battleship, Illinois, begging that water be used instead of wine. The failure of our efforts in the latter direction is well known. A recent letter has been sent to Secretary Alger asking if there be any truth in the newspaper assertion that houses of ill-fame are kept under military surveillance in some of the camps, and a courteous reply has been received from him saying that the matter should be at once investigated.

And now I come to a purely personal word which I find it not easy to say. For four consecutive years, my sisters, you have honored me by placing me in the position of responsibility and trust as your National corresponding secretary. I have often wondered how you ever came to elect me the first time; so few of you really knew anything of my ability or of my devotion to our principles, but you took me on a royal faith of which, to the very utmost of my powers, I have striven to be not wholly unworthy. You have given me of your love and your confidence; have shared with me your hopes and your fears, and have accepted my love and shared my burdens. So far as I know there has been peace and harmony, love and trust between me and the great body of white-ribboners during these four years. From my heart I thank you for having given me the privilege of serving such a constituency. I thank you that, in your hands, the loaves of my endeavor have been broken and multiplied far beyond what I could have hoped or dreamed.

And now I must bid you and the position to which you have called me a loving good-by. I have known clearly for two years that duty was calling me homeward; it has only seemed hard to adjust the two apparently conflicting duties. I had fully expected to close my work at the last Convention, but Miss Willard pleaded so earnestly that I should remain for one year more that I consented for her dear sake, and I shall never cease to be thankful that I did. But now the tide of duty, as well as of desire, sets strongly eastward, and nothing can longer keep me from the dear home from which I have been for so long an exile. I shall not leave the active work, for, as you already know, my own beloved

Massachusetts has honored me by placing me at the head of its glorious army, where, please God, we shall together, "push the battle to the gates," but the center of that battlefield will be my blessed home, and as your National corresponding secretary I can no longer serve.

I want to thank you and the entire organization, through you, for the patience with which you have borne with my failings and the love with which you have covered my faults and exalted my virtues. I think you have recognized that my errors have been of the head and not of the heart, and that with every pulse of my being I have desired to serve you and our beloved cause. To the very degree to which you have recognized this you have helped me to realize my desires as I could not otherwise have done. Be as good to my successor as you have been to me. I can ask for her no truer help, no higher happiness.

The poem, "Our Chieftain's Orders," was read by the author, Mrs. S. A. Oberholtzer, and impressively sung by Mrs. Graham.

Treasurer's Report.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER: The past year has been, in many respects, a trying one for all the General Officers, and the treasurer has not escaped her share of the trials and responsibilities. The books closed last year with a smaller balance than in former years, and owing to the great expenses of the Buffalo Convention, and the unusually small collections taken during its session, we virtually began the general work of the year with an empty treasury. Dues are never paid in during the first six months in any amounts that are likely to relieve the situation, and the General Officers, at a meeting held at Headquarters soon after our last Convention, were confronted with the open doors of an empty treasury and large bills for Minutes and Annual Leaflets that must be brought out at once and must be paid for. A very reputable firm of Christian temperance men made a proposition to us, similar to like plans that had been adopted by churches, missionary societies and Christian Endeavor Societies which had thereby replenished their treasuries, and after careful consideration, the General Officers, without a dissenting voice, voted to adopt the proposition, and the treasurer was instructed to push the plan. This she tried to do. The firm bore all the expense of printing letters and of postage, and furnished help in sending out the letters. You will see by my published report that the returns did not meet our expectations. If all states had taken hold of it as Missouri did, $10,000 would have gone into the National treasury as a result. In view of the results of the experiment, your treasurer recommends that no commercial plan be again resorted to, but urges that other plans be adopted that will give more money to our National work.

You will also note that the generous plans of our departed president with reference to one-half of her salary, which she has for the past two years turned back into the work, have been carried out. In accordance with her expressed wish, $200 has been given to the colored work, $600 to the press work, $100 to Mrs. Huut for scientific temperance instruction; the $100 remaining will go to pay for the beautiful banners which were promised by Miss Willard for largest gain in membership by state, district, county and local unions. Our treasury has been helped the past year by some bequests, for which we were very thankful: Mrs. Julia Hubbard, New York, $61-.90; Miss Susan Moore, Pennsylvania, $102.42. Mrs. Viola Neblett, Greenville, S. C., left $500 in her will to the National and the executor of her estate sent to the treasurer five $100 bonds of the Loan and Building Association of Augusta, Ga. Investigation shows that these bonds are good commercial paper, bearing seven per cent interest, and as soon as technical requirements are met in transfer of title on books of the association, ninety days notice only will be required when the cash can be realized. Some three years ago a cash note of $1,800 was sent to the National as a gift by Samuel Simpson. After the death of the donor, the heirs contested the gift; the matter has been in litigation, and has been decided in our favor, but has been appealed to the supreme court of Washington, hence we cannot record this as a definite asset, although we feel quite sure that a decision will be given in our favor. We hoped that we should have been able to add many life members this past year, but only one has been secured. We shall be glad to secure many names the coming year.

We have received for dues this year $14,667-.68: giving us a net gain of 5,096 members, the largest gain in any one year for several years. The two dollar gift fund has brought us $2,451.64. Total receipts from all sources, $24,297.55; total expenditures, $23,207.89; leaving a balance of $1,089.68 in the treasury November 1. This is a smaller balance than I have usually brought to you, but you will remember we had unusual expenses this year.

After my report had gone to the printer, I received a letter from the executor of the estate of George Woodford, a good friend of our W. C. T. U., saying, "If you will call at the Commerical National Bank of Chicago and sign a receipt, there will be given you $1,000." Of course I was very happy to comply with this request, and I had the privilege of depositing this generous sum in our treasury before leaving for this Convention. So after all our anxiety the Lord has proved better to us than our fears, and we feel like urging for the coming year our motto of the past year: "We will trust in the Lord and not be afraid."

The auditor, Mrs. Calista Bigelow, of Chicago, who, as Mrs. Stevens informed the Convention, is Miss Willard's own cousin, then read her report, after which came five minutes of physical exercises, conducted by Miss Mary A. Blood, of the Columbia School of Oratory, Chicago.

Reports from the departments were next in order, ten minutes, as is customary, being allotted to each. In the splendid record of these forty different branches of work white-ribboners have abundant reason for encouragement. We can give them here only in part, but they will be found entire in the National Minutes.

Superintendents' Reports.

PEACE AND ARBITRATION.

MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY: The aim of this department is to carry peace to the heart, home, state and nation; to help hasten the time when right and not might shall settle all national and international difficulties. Public differences have in the past been settled by warfare, but we hope that they will in the not distant future be settled by arbitration. We have twenty-seven state and one territorial superintendent, also a superintendent in the District of Columbia. Many of these have done grand work for the cause during the year, although there have been "wars and rumors of wars" which have clogged the wheels of success in some places. Twenty-one states have sent in reports showing an aggregate of many thousands of pages of peace literature distributed, the public press utilized, hundreds of sermons preached and lectures given in the interests of the cause; peace bands organized, much work done in connection with the L. T. L. and Bands of Mercy. Influences have been brought to bear against military drill in schools and Sabbath-schools, petitions have been circulated and personal work done. The subscription list of The Acorn, our juvenile peace paper, has increased. Essays on peace and arbitration have been written by students, the subject has been successfully discussed by debating clubs, our department concert exercises and Bible readings have been used in Sabbath-schools to some extent, the heads of government at Washington and members of Congress have been exhorted and encouraged by both personal and united effort to avert war and promote peace, and much valuable personal work of a more private nature has been done. Several states are ready to adopt this department as soon as they find a suitable woman available to superintend it. Missouri adopted it at her last convention. I wish each local union would observe peace day, the Sabbath before Christmas, if practicable, either by a union service of the churches, or by special sermons or peace exercises in the separate churches.

STATE AND COUNTY FAIRS.

MRS. L. N. GUILD: Twenty-seven states, two territories and the District of Columbia failed to report. I suppose they have no state superintendents of fair work. In these days of reunions, Chautauqua assemblies, picnics, Fourth of July celebrations, harvest homes and other holiday gatherings, we need superintendents of this department in every union, local, county and district. Be prepared to meet the people with the printed page, or better still secure good speakers. Make this department a source of revenue. Use your influence to improve the moral tone of fairs. One woman in Missouri prevented the sale of liquor at a G. A. R. encampment, although hundreds of dollars were offered for the privilege. A good report came from New York too late for publication. Kansas sent an additional report too late. Fair directors appreciate the work of the W. C. T. U. Some women say they will not go to fairs because of horse-racing and other objectionable features, the very best reason why you should be there. Women compete for premiums; in one state eleven thousand women made entries; thirteen thousand entries by men.

CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP AND LEGISLATION.

MRS. MARGARET D. ELLIS: This has been a red-letter year for petitions. In November ten thousand booklets with sample of "How to Petition," were sent to local unions throughout the country; these were followed early in the year by sets of petitions, forty-nine thousand of which were distributed far and wide; these were for the bills in which the W. C. T. U. were specially interested before Congress, chief of which was the Ellis Bill, to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors on any reservation, or in any building under control of the United States government, and for other purposes. This includes not only the national capital, but the selling of liquors in the canteen at army posts, Soldiers' Homes, immigrant stations, and all government buildings. This has been an "off year" with state legislatures, but our faithful women have done nobly all along the line. My very efficient associate, Miss Anna Downey, conducted during the year, nine Christian citizenship institutes, some of which were a great success. She visited sixteen cities under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., delivering addresses and lectures on Christian citizenship. She writes: "The Cuban war really absorbed the attention of the nation to such an extent that our Christian Citizenship Fourth of July was quite pushed to the rear; however, at Christian citizenship headquarters there were received several hundred applications for literature for the 'New Fourth,' showing that many cities and towns were wide awake. As far as reported 789 sermons have been preached on Christian citizenship, and 155 lectures given. Fifty towns in Florida observed the 'New Fourth,' New Jersey, fifteen, and Iowa three. New Jersey holds Christian citizenship meetings on Lincoln's and Washington's birthdays, with most gratifying results."

After some announcements by the secretary, Mrs. Hays, of Minnesota, rendered a solo.

Miss Margaret Sudduth, who for eight years was on the staff of THE UNION SIGNAL, and for three years its managing editor, was made a member of the Convention with all privileges save voting.

The benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Lilian Phelps, of Canada, and the Convention adjourned.

FRIDAY EVENING.

The devotional service was conducted by Mrs. Rebecca B. Chambers, president of Pennsylvania W. C. T. U.

THE PRESIDENT: We are now to have the distinguished honor to be welcomed to this state by his excellency, Governor Clough. It is indeed a delightful pleasure to present at this time the governor of the state of Minnesota.

Governor Clough was greeted with great applause and the Chautauqua salute, and spoke in part as follows:

"You meet in our capital city at a time when our common country is about concluding peace at the close of a most successful war. The officers and members of your organization come together to celebrate the victories that you have won for the home, for good morals and for the higher ideals that are to uplift the world. Like our nation your warfare has not been for self-aggrandizement, for the advancement of any selfish interests, but for the good of suffering and sorrowing humanity.

"But as our hearts are saddened as a nation while we think of the dead at Santiago, at Manila, and at the fever camps and hospitals at home, so yours are sad in the midst of your joy as you mourn your president, stricken down, as a good soldier of the cause she represented, at her post of duty. Your hearts may at times turn to the past—your faces are set, however, toward the future as is that of our nation. You have your problems and perplexities. They are the problems and perplexities of the home, and the home controls the final destiny of the nation and of the race.

"It gives me great pleasure, as the chief executive of Minnesota, to bid you most hearty welcome. I invite your careful investigation of the plan of public helpfulness involved in our state school of Owatonna. I bespeak from you a study of our penal and charitable institutions. I called the attention of the last legislature to the subject of separate prisons for women and girls. I hope that we may record as one of the results of your visit among us such aroused general interest in the matter that Minnesota will soon place herself by the side of Massachusetts, will create a separate prison for women under the direction of a board of women managers, and thus round out her record of penal institutions and make the whole what, with this single exception, they are now, the best to be found in the world.

"You meet at an auspicious time, just before our legislature comes together in biennial session. I trust that your deliberations, not only upon the subject named but upon all others, will be such that they will stimulate thought and action among us and be fruitful in advancing our legislation and also in fostering all that is best in public and private life."

THE PRESIDENT: And were it not that there are others who are to respond to this strong, instructive and hearty welcome, my heart would command me to do so here and now. We are not to be welcomed to-night, as we almost always are, by the mayor of the city, for I have learned that the mayor is out of town (laughter and applause), but something even more honorable awaits us. I do not recall that we have ever been welcomed by two governors before. We are now to be welcomed by one honored all over this country, the ex-governor of Minnesota, and he speaks not for the state to-night, but for the city. It is a great privilege to present ex-Governor Ramsay. He was Minnesota's first territorial governor. Is not that better than to have a mayor?

EX-GOVERNOR RAMSAY: I have no speech to make. I am too old to make a speech and must be excused. But I congratulate you upon your large attendance here and the material of which you are composed. Of course every man that reads—and every man and woman in Minnesota does read—knows what you are and who you are, and how much good you have done and how much you propose to do. I have been here for fifty long years; came here and disputed possession with the Indians, and I suppose you might say of our people too, what they said of the pioneers of New England when they landed upon that shore. It was said the first thing that they did was to fall upon their knees, and the second was to fall upon the Indians. You are welcome to St. Paul, heartily welcome. You have done great good, you will do much more. But why did you stay away from us so long? Why did you not come earlier and put us in the right way? I hope that, late as the day is, it will not be without help to us. I hope that you may have a pleasant time of it here, and that all your objects and purposes in visiting here may be accomplished to your full satisfaction, and when you leave us, think of us, come again, come often, and speak well of us when you are away. (Great applause.)

THE PRESIDENT: I really do not believe if the mayor had been here, he would have done as well as that. We will now be welcomed by the honored pastor of this beautiful church, Rev. Samuel G. Smith, D. D.:

DR. SMITH said in part: I remember the last great gathering in this church under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It was a local gathering, but there were two superb women here. There was Lady Henry Somerset, that noble, consecrated English aristocrat, and there was Lady Frances Willard, God's own aristocrat—a brow more noble than any upon which a coronet was ever placed. We remember her and her brave, earnest words; they have lived with us ever since, and I can but join with you in the tributes which you have been paying to your fallen leader to-day, for we, too, understand her; we saw her here, and we know her heart of fire, her spirit of snow and her brain like the dawn; we understand all that, and we know that she is not dead; she still lives; she has just risen above your ranks, that is all. I greet you in the name of that large view you have of reform, a larger view than is shared by many temperance workers, what your sainted leader used to call the religion of the body. You have come to understand, as many others do not, that the child must be well born, must be well nourished, must be well taught, must be well surrounded. You have learned not to take your statistics in a shallow way. One of these people with a lead pencil who cipher out everything, went to a prison to find out how many people were there on account of bad habits, and he said to the first man, "Well, how did you come here?" Said he: "Two policemen—" "Yes, I know, but did drink have anything to do with it?" "Yes, both drunk." (Laughter.) Another man inquired of at the same investigation as to how he got in said, "I came in by sneezing." "Sneezing?" repeated his interlocutor. "Yes, you see I sneezed, and he woke up, and then they nabbed me." So he got in by the bad habit of sneezing. Ladies, a great deal of statistical work that is done in the name of social reform is done in just that way. You are learning to be scientific and to sift your statistics. You have come to understand the twofold relation of things; poverty makes intemperance; intemperance makes poverty; you must cure both. The day is coming when there will be a federation of all our forces, and your work, divided into so many departments, under the one head or the other will appeal to every good man and every good woman who desires to work for the good of humanity.

Archbishop Ireland was to have extended the welcome of the Catholic temperance societies but as he was unable to be present it was given by Mr. A. W. Gutridge, who said in part:

I come from our workers with a message of faith, hope and courage, and a wish for closer union. In this state we have allied in the Catholic Total Abstinence movement about seven thousand persons, men, women and children. The men welcome you. They are beyond that rather cheap variety of talk that we sometimes hear circulated, that it is impossible for women to attend properly to their homes while they are attending to some other, extraordinary duties. We have reached a point where we know that the woman who attends to nothing but home attends to that in rather an indifferent way.

The speaker also extended a welcome on behalf of the women and children, and said in closing that he hoped temperance workers would work together, irrespective of religious beliefs, and that none would follow the example set by our forefathers, of "hating each other for the love of God."

MRS. BESSIE LAYTHE SCOVELL, president of Minnesota, extended a welcome on behalf of the state union. She said that she had been converted to temperance work when the Convention met in Minneapolis twelve years ago, and she was sure that many young women would be led into the work by their visit to St. Paul this year. "Hospitality is like mercy," she said, "it is twice blessed; it blesses him that gives and him that takes, and we know that we shall be blessed even more than you by your coming among us. I know that your lives will touch our lives, and that we shall go out through our state, and somehow the life that we have touched will bring a sweet and blessed influence to us." She was especially glad that the Convention had come to St. Paul so soon after the happy harvest gathering, "when the frost is on the pumpkin and the corn is in the shock."

MRS. STELLA B. IRVINE, in behalf of the local unions, said: "Among all who welcome you to-night, none are more enthusiastic than are the few old Crusaders among us. We may still learn lessons of love and loyalty from them." After referring to the good influence which she knew the women of the W. C. T. U. would have upon St. Paul, and the blessing which would be derived from them, the speaker closed by saying: "We are sad, and words fail to express our deep regret that we may not welcome in bodily presence our sainted Chieftain, though we know that if our eyes were not so dim we should see her sweet spirit hovering near, and we should realize more certainly that though absent in body, she is still present with us in spirit."

Responses of ten minutes each were made on behalf of the Convention.

MRS. FRANCES W. LEITER, of Ohio, spoke eloquently for the original Crusaders. Briefly reviewing the history of the white-ribbon movement, she said that in the early days they considered the saloonkeeper the cause of all their trouble; now they had found that behind the saloonkeeper stood the United States government, which made rum-selling a legitimate business.

MISS MARY L. PAGE, president of the W. C. T. U. of the state of Washington, spoke for the Pacific slope. She said: "A number of years ago Miss Willard said in her annual address: 'You have given us a welcome to your homes; we are glad of that, but are you hospitable to our ideas?' If you people here in St. Paul are hospitable to the ideas of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, then indeed we will be glad that we have come among you."

Mrs. Helen M. Barker, National treasurer, made the collection speech.

MRS. MARY C. CARTLAND, president of North Carolina W. C. T. U., responded in behalf of the South. She referred to the fact that the late war had done much to unify all sections of our country. The northern press has been loud in its eulogies of southern heroes; North Carolina furnished the hero of Cardenas; Alabama the genius of Hobson, and a southern man first planted the stars and stripes on Cuban soil.

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, of New Jersey, quoted: "We that have turned the world upside down have come hither also." She spoke of the difficulties that some women were willing to encounter in order to attend local conventions, some having ridden thirty miles in a lumbering stage to attend a convention at Montauk, and had to ride thirty miles back, but had said that they felt well repaid. She thanked the governor especially for his welcome, and said the first governor who had ever extended a welcome to a W. C. T. U. convention was the governor of Tennessee, and that it meant something in those days for a man to bid them welcome.

The Convention was then favored with music by the choir from the First M. E. Church and the benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts.

SATURDAY MORNING.

Meeting opened with devotional services conducted by Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, president of Louisiana. The fresh flowers which adorned the leader's empty chair were this second day supplied by the Eastern states, and were pink chrysanthemums. The superintendents' reports were continued. The purity department was represented by Miss Rose Wood-Allen, who brought the greetings of her mother, Dr. Mary Wood-Allen, the latter being unable to be present, but said that as the printed report would be distributed to the delegates, she would not read it. "It was cheering to the veterans," said Mrs. Stevens, "to have a girl like this stand up and give a report." A message of love and sympathy was sent to Dr. Allen. Also telegrams to Mothers Thompson, Stewart, Wallace and Esther MacNeil, conveying the greetings of the Convention. Telegrams were read from Lady Henry Somerset, Agnes Slack, Swankie Cameron (for the British girls), Dr. Kellogg, Mrs. Leonora B. Lake, and the W. C. T. U. convention of British Columbia.

[NOTE.—The list of telegrams sent and received will be given at the close of the Convention report.]

The following department reports were then read:

MERCY.

MRS. MARY F. LOVELL: There is a steady advance in the work of this department evidenced by the increased number of superintendents, the amount done and the development of public sentiment. Thirty-three state superintendents, thirty-eight district, 161 county and 216 local are reported. The number of the last named is known to be larger; 983 Bands of Mercy are reported, with a membership of 43,538; 778 of these are adults. Systematic effort has been made in most of the states to secure the coöperation of teachers, superintendents of public instruction, ministers of the gospel, editors and others. Many interesting results are reported. Pacific College, Oregon, had two orations by young men on the subject of bird wearing. Teachers say that the Bands of Mercy have more than repaid the time and trouble of conducting them because of the higher and more philanthropic spirit among the pupils. A great change has also been observed in some of the parents. Bird day is observed in a large number of schools. New York and Pennsylvania have appointed state superintendents of mercy in the L. T. L., a good example for other states to follow. In North Carolina the colored people are taking up the work, and children as well as adults are often heard protesting against cruelty. The value and necessity of the department become increasingly evident, demonstrating, as one writer recently said, that

"Just the art of being kind
Is what the sad world needs."

EVANGELISTIC.

ELIZABETH W. GREENWOOD: Nations and organizations, as well as individuals, have their deep experiences, periods of anguish which are their divinest opportunity. In great sorrows we turn to God and His work. This has been true during the past year of sore bereavement in our organization, and of war in our nation. The evangelistic work in all departments has been marked by new zeal and consecration, and the reports are unusually full, showing a general broadening and deepening of the work.

Our circular for 1898 called for a revival of effort among the masses, for rescue work, pledge signing, outdoor services, and teaching and emphasizing of our foundation principles of consecration, total abstinence and prohibition. The response has been most gratifying and the Crusade spirit has been very manifest. An open door for evangelistic work among the soldiers and sailors has been entered by many of our unions with rich results. Some have assisted Mr. Moody and the Christian commission in their grand work, during which not less than 50,000 men confessed Christ; over 50,000 Testaments and as many hymn books were distributed, and 50,000 or more of other good books were put into their hands. The National evangelistic superintendent has sent the usual circulars and hundreds of letters. Four calls to prayer have been issued.

"Hints and Helps" for evangelistic workers have been in demand and testimonies to its helpfulness are constantly received. Sermons, lectures and addresses have been given by the National superintendent in a number of states and series of lectures and expositions in Brooklyn.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

MRS. VARILA F. COX: For fourteen years the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has stood like a rock, not for a puritanical, but for a rational Sabbath. Our Sabbath pledge, prepared by Mrs. Bateham and Mrs. Earle, and endorsed and taken by Miss Willard and a host of other white-ribboners, is still winning its way by its reasonableness, nearly two thousand having taken it this year. The April week of prayer, originating with our organization, is now observed by all Sabbath organizations in this and other lands. With the consent of the General Officers, we changed the date of the week of prayer from the first week of April to week following Easter week. Hereafter, the week following Easter week will be known as the week of prayer for the preservation and better observance of the Sabbath. This year we sent out 18,000 of our Lord's Day leaflets, 5,000 more than has ever been used before. We prepared a memorial, which was signed by the representatives of most of the national and international Sabbath societies and presented to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church and to the General Council of the Congregational church, asking them to adopt the week following Easter week as a week of prayer for the Sabbath. We visited one annual conference of the M. E. church, and, at the request of the chairman of the Sabbath observance committee, gave for distribution a number of our leaflets, and secured mention of our work and literature in their report. As a result I have had requests for leaflets for distribution in the churches. Presented the work at the conference at Prohibition Park, also at a Y conference. Have sent to Australia 23,400 pages of literature and to Canada 3,896 pages. Reports have been received from thirty-five states, showing an excellent record for the year. We have added five new leaflets to our list. Mrs. Cornelia C. Moots, of Michigan, has been appointed lecturer for this department and we hope appointments will be made for her when convenient.

At the close of this report Mrs. Hunt replied briefly to accusations that had been made concerning articles of hers in Sunday papers.

The reports given in the group were adopted.

PURITY IN LITERATURE AND ART.

MRS. EMILIE D. MARTIN: No year has been so fraught with results as the one just closing. Your National superintendent has sought to reach every section of our country with the literature to instruct and arouse public sentiment. Many of our state conventions, large meetings and other societies have been liberally supplied free of charge. Public opinion is expressing itself through sermons, lectures, literature and a higher appreciation of the Bible as sacred literature. Large gatherings have given their hearty approval, prominent among them the National Mothers' Congress, before whom I made an address. The state presidents have been a unit in sympathy and hearty coöperation. To the organizers too high commendation can not be given for the word fitly spoken. Miss Willard's last annual address contains the "Plea of Women to the Press." This has received the support of women's societies and prominent individuals, the indorsement of the plea by the Woman's National Press Association and the Woman's International Press Union. All the great organizations who have indorsed the work of this department continue their support. The Associated Press has been prompt in sending out news relating to this department, the metropolitan and other papers giving space for articles and items. An educational work has been going on in every state and territory. The work is well organized and reports nearly uniform.

The minutes of the previous day were then read and approved. A motion to defer the report of the executive committee was lost, and the report of the meeting held during the two days prior to the Convention was read by the secretary. After five minutes of physical exercise, conducted by Miss Blood, department reports were resumed.

WORK AMONG MINERS.

MRS. WINNIE F. MINEAR-ENGLISH: The beginning of this year found your superintendent prostrated from over-work, and the physician ordered absolute rest from work for one year. In accord with the advices of National Officers I divided the work of correspondence between my two associates, giving to Mrs. Kuhl the supervision of twenty-one states and to Mrs. Kinney the care of eighteen states. They were abundant in labors and worked wisely, reporting to me quarterly. During December, January and February I was confined to my room—nine weeks of the time on crutches. Notwithstanding this I prepared and published 2,000 copies of my new "Manual for Workers," 1,000 copies of my "National Leaflet," 1,000 copies of my "National Report," 2,000 "Programs for an Afternoon Meeting in Unions," 500 "Blanks for Miners," 750 "Report Blanks," 26 circular letters, all of which were sent to the states by myself and associates. I have purchased and sent to superintendents and others many thousands of leaflets, booklets and tracts. Have furnished material to several counties and states for programs where this department was to be presented. Have prepared six different addresses and delivered them. I have kept up regular correspondence with 8 states; received 60 letters; held 60 meetings. Pages of literature distributed, 11,615. The prize money of five dollars has for the third time been won by Kansas, Mrs. Manetta Tinney, superintendent. The custody of our National banner has been won this time by Pennsylvania, Miss Puella Dornblazer, superintendent. Missouri would have kept the banner another year if her local superintendents had been prompt with their reports.

Crusade Memories.

It was now eleven o'clock, the hour announced on the program for "Crusade Memories." Routine business was suspended, and the original Crusaders—fifty-two of them—came to the platform. Miss Greenwood presided. Not all these women were silver-haired, showing that many were quite young when, twenty-five years ago, they enlisted in the fight for home protection and helped to start that "whirlwind of the Lord" which resulted in the arousement of such forces as will never be stilled until this whole round world is taken "for Christ's own kingdom some glad day."

The Convention sang, "I am thine, O Lord," and the Crusaders read in concert the Crusade Psalm. Mrs. Weaver, of New York, led in prayer, the Crusade mothers kneeling, just as they did in the old-fashioned Crusade meetings. Then, still kneeling, they sang, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," just as they used to sing it on the sawdust covered floor of a saloon. As the voices, still strong and sweet, sang the familiar words,

"All my trust on Thee is stayed,
All my help from Thee I bring,"

white-ribbon women did not try to restrain their tears, and spectators in the gallery and at the reporters' tables were visibly affected. From the Crusaders came "Amen," "Bless the Lord," "Lord, help," just such exclamations as used to come from their lips when they were, with unmoved front, patiently enduring the many indignities heaped upon them by irate saloonkeepers. Then they arose from their knees and gave to the Convention some of the memories of that wonderful time. The speeches were two minutes each, and full of Crusade fire. Among those who spoke were: Mrs. Ellis, New Jersey, Mrs. Shay, Mrs. Smith and Miss Pugh, of Ohio, Mrs. Shores, Wisconsin, Mrs. Martin and Mrs. Chandler, of Pennsylvania (the latter crusaded in Delaware), Miss Gordon, Indiana, Mrs. Palmer, Iowa, Mrs. Gray, now of Ohio, but who crusaded in Michigan, Mrs. Seelobe, of Minnesota.

When asked by Miss Greenwood if any present had had hot water thrown upon them, the replies came promptly, "I" and "I" and "I." Some had been deluged with beer while singing and praying in saloons, some had had oil and paint thrown upon them, and had been almost suffocated by pepper thrown upon the stoves. Others had been arrested and taken to jail where they were unable to sit down because of the filth, so walked up and down singing, "Am I a soldier of the cross!" Truly, as one dear old German woman said in her broken English, "If the W. C. T. U. women go on in the same spirit as did their mothers, the liquor traffic will go down!" It was an inspiration, indeed, for the younger workers to look into the faces of these mothers, and to hear their words so full of faith and courage and of trust in the God of Jacob who had led the Crusaders a quarter of a century ago, and is leading the white-ribbon host to-day.

The Crusade women sang, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," to the old tune, while the women on the floor and visitors in the gallery waved handkerchiefs enthusiastically.

Miss Anna Gordon asked to say a word. She said she wished she had been an original Crusader, and that because she loved dear old Mother National, and because she loved Mother Thompson, the Crusade leader, she desired to furnish a tangible token of that love, and so presented to the National treasurer a check for twenty-five dollars, to make Mother Thompson a life member of the organization, and she urged others to follow her example. Quickly the response came, and faster than the secretaries could record them followed the names of life and memorial members, until over forty had been secured, and the treasurer's face was beaming with delight. A list of these and other names will be given in a later issue.

The Convention then sang, "Rock of Ages," Crusaders kneeling, and sentence prayers were offered all over the house.

Miss Vincent, of Australia, asked permission to tell how she became a Crusader, and in concluding her remarks said, "Again and again I thank God for these women." A verse of the Crusade hymn was sung, the Aaronic benediction was repeated by the Convention in concert, and this inspiring part of the twenty-fifth anniversary Convention came to an end.

In the bustle incident to the taking of seats and resumption of business, a telegram read by Mrs. Ramsey, of South Dakota, was unheard by some, and amid the wild applause which it evoked, the question was asked, "What's all this fuss about?" "Woman suffrage voted in in South Dakota!" shouted Mrs. Hoffman. Then the applause was deafening, and hurrahs were thrown in. [We regret to state that later returns show that the amendment was lost.]

On motion of Mrs. Hunt, the consideration of proposed amendments to the constitution was made the special order for 3 P. M., and after a preliminary report by the credentials committee and more notices of meetings and lost and found articles, and the reading by the long-suffering secretaries of numerous other slips of paper sent to the platform during the morning, the Convention adjourned.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

The devotional service was conducted by the Misses Vincent and Cummins, of Australia, round-the-world missionaries. Mrs. Graham sang the White Ribbon Star Spangled Banner, after which came the introduction of fraternal and visiting delegates and distinguished guests.

THE PRESIDENT: I now have the great pleasure of introducing as fraternal delegates from the United Kingdom Alliance of Great Britain, of which society Sir Wilfrid Lawson is president, a member of the executive committee, Mr. T. Porter Smith, of Lancashire, and Mrs. Smith, whose heart is like our hearts concerning the great question of temperance.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith were received with the Chautauqua salute, and Mr. Smith made a brief address, in which he said: "You speak of your sainted leader and of what memorial you shall build to her great services. I know of no memorial that you can build, I know of no form in which her name and her work could be celebrated so enduringly as in the wonderful organization of this union."

The President then introduced Mrs. A. O. Rutherford, president of the W. C. T. U. of Canada, who spoke of the great victory gained for prohibition on the 29th day of September, when the people of Canada said by their votes that they wanted their land freed from the liquor traffic. The speaker attributed a large part of the result to the education of the people in the direction of temperance through the agency of the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Elizabeth D. Bell, corresponding secretary of Manitoba union, and Miss Wiggins, Dominion lecturer and organizer, were introduced and spoke a few words of greeting.

Miss Lillian Phelps, a licensed preacher of the Methodist church of Canada, was then presented. She said that after all the good things that had been said about Canada, the Convention must feel that they would want to be annexed.

Mr. Calderwood, of Minnesota, brought greeting from the state prohibition committee, of which body he is secretary.

At this point six little girls came to the platform bearing baskets of fruit, which Mrs. Guild presented to the Convention on behalf of the Fair department, the fruit being furnished by the Niagara Grape Company. As a part of the presentation address Mrs. Nelle G. Burger, of Missouri, read a poem written for the occasion by Miss Harriet Guild, daughter of the superintendent of the department.

THE PRESIDENT: I do not know how to get it around to all of you. I am sure it is very fair fruit, and I do not know what to say to these children and of the poem; I am sure I could not have written a poem as a speech of acceptance, so I will simply say that we thank you; we are glad you came; we love to have you stand on our platform and we are pleased with the fruit, but we are much more pleased to have you here, as beautiful as the fruit.

Mrs. Jeanette Hill Knox and Mrs. Lizzie Hill Mills were introduced by the president, with the remark that their grandfathers and the grandfather of Miss Willard were brothers.

The president then presented Mr. H. Tatsuta, a Japanese from the Moody Institute, who spoke of the wonderful work Miss Clara Parrish had done in his native country, and stated that he intended to devote his life to the cause of temperance.

Judge Pollock, of North Dakota, was introduced by Mrs. Helen M. Barker as the man who had framed the prohibition law of that state. He made an eloquent address, in which he referred to the encouragement and help he had received from Mrs. Barker and her brave comrades of the W. C. T. U. when eleven years ago he was prosecuting officer in Fargo and secured the conviction at one time of ten persons for violation of the local option law. A rising vote of thanks was tendered to the judge for his services in behalf of prohibition.

At the request of Mrs. Ramsey, Mrs. Cranmer, of South Dakota, was invited to the platform, and made a ringing speech, in which she said that every suffragist in South Dakota had worked for the amendment. The W. C. T. U., the Equal Suffrage Association, the Congregational, Methodist and other churches had each done its share. The Catholic bishop of South Dakota is an ardent suffragist and is not afraid to acknowledge it. The Scandinavian people at the state convention of their Total Abstinence Society by a rising vote unanimously passed a resolution in favor of equal suffrage. Mrs. Cranmer closed by saying: "You can stop the crowing of the cock, but you can not stop the dawning of the morn, nor the sunlight of the noon. It is bound to come."

Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, Mich., who was to have given an address on "The Gospel of Health," was unable to be present, and Dr. Jones of the same city spoke in his behalf.

Mrs. Harriet H. Dutcher, of Stillwater, Minn., president of the National Woman's Keeley League, was introduced.

Mrs. Mary Henry Rossiter, editor and manager of Good Health, and daughter of Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, was introduced and spoke a few words in behalf of her journal.

Mrs. Clinton Smith, of Washington, D. C., was presented and extended the greetings of the American Anti-Saloon League.

Mr. Davidson, secretary of the Wisconsin Sunday Rest Association, was introduced, and responded fittingly.

The order of the day was called for, viz., the consideration of the proposed amendment to the constitution making the superintendents members of the executive committee.

On motion of Mrs. Dunham, the time of each speaker in debate was limited to three minutes. A further motion by Mrs. Clark, of Ohio, limited the time for discussion to one half hour.

After the usual animated debate which this question had always evoked, the amendment was carried by a vote of 236 for to 52 against. Mrs. Hunt, who had mothered the amendment all the way through, explained that this result was the consummation of a struggle of thirteen years.

In answer to a question by Mrs. Rounds, the president stated that in her opinion this resolution goes into effect at the next annual Convention, or after the close of this Convention and its post-executive meeting.

A motion was made that the board of organizers be admitted to the executive committee. After brief debate, it was lost by a vote of 63 for and 127 against.

A motion by Mrs. Benjamin that National lecturers be made members of the Convention was carried.

Discussion of other amendments was made special order for 10:30 Monday morning.

An address by Consul Emma Booth-Tucker was next on the program. She said in part:

As I was on the way to this meeting I was wondering how I could best utilize the few moments that are mine this afternoon, and I thought I could not do better than pass on a message of inspiration that fell from the lips of your late leader into the depths of my soul a little time back. It was between two and three years ago; a dark cloud was at that time hovering over the battlefield of the Salvation Army in this country, and I had occasion to meet Miss Willard and to have a little heart-to-heart talk with her. She was not very well at the time, and was reclining upon the couch in her room. As I sat with her in the gloaming we talked long, and then we prayed, and I rose to go, and the last words that she said to me were: "Emma, just go straight on and all will be well." So now I give these words to you as a message from your dear leader who is beckoning to you from the beyond.

Mrs. Schreiner, representing the Wisconsin Norwegian Total Abstinence Society, was introduced and spoke friendly words of greeting.

Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts made a stirring address for which a vote of thanks was extended by the Convention. The address will be published in a later issue of THE UNION SIGNAL.

Mrs. Helen Bullock, chairman of the committee on church supplies, read the announcements for the Sunday services in the churches of St. Paul and Minneapolis—one hundred and one in all, and the Rev. J. C. Andrews, of the African M. E. church, pronounced the benediction.

SATURDAY EVENING.

Y NIGHT.

Mrs. Boole, general secretary Young Woman's Branch, presiding.

Y night is always one of the most enjoyable and most inspiring times of the National Convention, and this year was no exception to the rule. On the platform with Mrs. Boole sat Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, World's Y secretary, and many young women leaders. The music of the evening was furnished by the vested choir from St. Paul's Episcopal church, and the beautiful selections were fully appreciated by the large audience.

Miss A. E. Thomas, secretary of the Y Branch of Pennsylvania, read the Scripture lesson and offered prayer. This was followed by music.

We grieve that we can quote but a sentence or two from the bright speeches which made this evening such an entertaining one.

Miss Louise Hollister, secretary of the Minnesota Y Branch, extended a welcome on behalf of her state.

"This Y organization," she said, "is a glorious prophecy and beautiful promise of the glad time to come when there shall be no sex in citizenship nor in righteousness, when the young women will display as fine instinct and as sound judgment in choosing the fathers of their children as the men do in choosing the mothers of theirs."

MISS MARY LILLIAN HERR, editor of The White Ribbon Banner, Connecticut, responded in an eloquent address, in which she said: From the busy towns of staid old New England, from the balmy air of the Southland, from the hills and the valleys of our fair inland states, and from the shores kissed by the waves that are lapping our glorious new possessions, we come gladly to bring you greetings. We represent a young womanhood pledged to pure lives, pure hearts, pure homes, a young womanhood pledged to true thinking, true being, true doing.

Music by the choir.

Mrs. Boole, calling Mrs. Barnes to the chair, then presented "The Record and the Outlook of the Y Branch." As we wish to give more space to this report of the splendid work carried on by our young women, we reserve it for the Y page in a later issue. The report was adopted by a rising vote.

Mrs. Burger, of Missouri, made a telling collection speech, saying in conclusion:

Our women are advancing; their sphere is broadening and deepening all over the land.

You talk of woman's sphere,
As though it had a limit;
There's not a joy, a weal or woe,
There's not a whisper, yes or no,
There's not a life, a death or birth,
That has a feather's weight of worth,
Without a woman in it.

I know you think perhaps we are a little bit inclined to get out of our sphere occasionally, but I want to tell you that we are going to stay strictly in that sphere in the old time-honored custom of asking for money. You welcomed us to your city, to your homes and to your churches last night, and you also welcomed us to your hearts and to your loving sympathies, but so far we have not been welcomed to your pocketbooks; and we are going to ask you now to be very liberal in your contributions.

Miss Dixie Smith, of Minnesota, recited in a charming manner, and with much natural grace, a selection which had won for her the diamond medal in a recent contest. When she finished flowers were presented to her by the superintendent of the medal contest department, Mrs. Carman.

Music by the choir.

The "snap shots" by National Y organizers were a most interesting and entertaining part of the program. We quote from them briefly:

MISS RHENA E. MOSHER, of Pennsylvania, who stated she had enlisted in the work through the influence of Mrs. Mary Towne Burt, said:

I am not going to tell you to-night about the hard things our organizers have to meet. I am not going to tell you about the mud and the rain and the cold, about the umbrellas turned wrong-side out by the wind and about the empty churches. I want to tell you some little bit of what I have done, because that is what our secretary wants us to do. This last year I have given 94 addresses; have held 32 parlor meetings and 12 children's meetings; I have formed 14 societies, and secured about 340 members, including the W's and Y's, active and honorary. And I want to beg of the mothers who are here to-night that they will teach their daughters how to work in the temperance field, so that we may have thousands of new members next year.

MISS CARRIE LEE CARTER, of Missouri, had during the past year traveled 5,000 miles by rail and 540 miles in hacks and wagons and conveyances of every description; had addressed 205 meetings: had added 256 members and 155 honoraries to the ranks, and had secured 460 signatures to the total abstinence pledge. "In addition to the W. C. T. U. meetings," she continued, "I have spoken before many schools, colleges, teachers' institutes and Sabbath-schools, at fashionable receptions and at wonderful and curious meetings in the backwoods. I have spoken at missionary meetings, Chautauquas and church associations, but the picture that lingers in my memory as the most interesting one of this year's labor is a day that I spent in the state penitentiary of my own state, Missouri. I wish that you could see with me the long line of convicts, 2,300 men clad in prison garb, as they walked in single file with the lock step. I asked of an official of the prison who stood by my side, 'How many of these men are here because of drink?' and his answer came quickly: 'Four-fifths of all the inmates of this prison.'"

MISS BELLE KEARNEY, of Mississippi, said that it would be hard to state where she had been this year and what she had done, as she had kept no definite count, "but," she said, "I thank the Lord for everything that has come to me; for every heartbreak and crucifixion; they have been many, but I have been made strong to bear them. Let no such word as self-sacrifice be found in our vocabulary, but let every discouragement and every heartache return us a thousandfold strengthening, a sweeter, deeper, holier baptism for service."

MISS MARY A. BLOOD, principal of the Columbia School of Oratory, Chicago, made a brief address on "Physical Development and the Temperance Reform." She said, "It is the province of physical culture to teach us the laws of our physical well being and to plant our feet in the paths of obedience to those laws. The teacher of physical culture and the temperance worker are aiming at one ultimate end, the uplifting of humanity through the purification of the body. It is not the privilege of the physical culture teacher to do such heroic work as that with which your noble temperance workers have blessed the world, but in a more humble way we may, I believe, aid in the temperance cause of the future. Wendell Phillips said the great cause of the drink habit was the craving for stimulants. Physical culture teaches the relying for stimulants upon sleep, upon carefully planned exercise, upon vigorous rubbing of the body, which will send the blood bounding through the veins and cause the body to recuperate rapidly, and in this way it is stimulated by beneficial means."

Mrs. Boole said that there were not only speakers and writers among the Y's, but poets, and introduced Mrs. Cora Seberry, of New York, who recited an original poem, "My Boy," which we hope to give our readers later.

Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, of New York, general secretary of the Young Woman's Branch, World's W. C. T. U., made the closing address. She said, "I have only been gone out of the United States a year, but I come back just as happy on Y night as ever, and I was always so happy that I never could make a speech myself, because I grew so interested and was so charmed with all these dear young women." She showed a letter two or three yards long written from Japan by Clara Parrish, the round-the-world missionary sent out by the Y's, which told of more than a thousand young women enrolled as white-ribboners in the Sunrise land. Mrs. Barnes stated that Y organizations had been formed in Japan, China, India, Corea, Australia and South Africa, and stated that the countries along the Mediterranean were the ones needing work today. In Spain, too, progress was being made. She spoke of a letter recently received from Miss Esther Alonso, the young Spanish girl who had stood on the platform of the National Convention last year, who told of a grand feast which had been prepared in her honor on her return from college, how she had been urged by her young friends to drink her health in wine, how she had refused to do so, and how finally they had brought in large bottles of water and drank her health in that. She told further of the awful havoc made by the late war in her native land, and of how grieved she had been because her countrymen were struggling with the people of the United States. Mrs. Barnes urged in closing that the young women pray earnestly for the work of Clara Parrish in foreign lands.

Mrs. Graham sang "Victory" in her inimitable manner, evoking the usual enthusiasm and applause. The banner for the greatest increase in Y membership was awarded to New York, the banner for the largest percentage of increase to Indiana, with fitting speeches by the presidents of the giving and receiving states.

The exercises closed with the Aaronic benediction and we W's left the church with hearts swelling with pride in our splendid "daughters" of the Y Branch—the strong staff and beautiful rod of the mother organization.

SUNDAY SERVICES.

The annual Convention sermon was preached in the People's Church at 2:30 o'clock, by Miss Elizabeth W. Greenwood, World's and National superintendent of the evangelistic department, affectionately called "our white-ribbon pastor." Her text was Hebrews 12:2, and her subject, "Suffering and Victory." The latter part of the sermon was an application of the text to Miss Willard's life, in which a comprehensive and beautiful tribute to our departed leader was paid. As Miss Greenwood's sermon is to be published as a leaflet by the W. T. P. A., no part of it will be given in THE UNION SIGNAL. Excellent music was furnished by the People's Church choir, and the attendance was good. The fresh flowers for Miss Willard's chair were supplied by the middle states.

The Scripture reading and prayer were by Miss Anna A. Gordon, assistant secretary World's W. C. T. U., after which she left to address a children's meeting in the Central Presbyterian church. Pledge cards were festooned about the pulpit and rostrum of this church. The L. T. L. secretaries of West Virginia, Kansas, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Minnesota, Washington and Arkansas were introduced. Miss Hollister, L. T. L. secretary of Minnesota, made a short address, and Mrs. Maude L. Greene, National organizer, gave a chalk talk.

In the evening at the People's Church, to a large audience, Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts spoke on "Living and Dying Nations," Mrs. Mary H. Hunt on "Scientific Temperance Education for Our New Possessions," and Mrs. Margaret D. Ellis on "Legislation." Numerous pulpits in St. Paul and Minneapolis were filled by representative women, and not only were the broad lines of our work set forth, but many of their particular subdivisions were presented, such as rescue work and white cross societies. It was a good day, the results of which are summed up in the report of Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, chairman of the committee on pulpit supplies.

MONDAY MORNING.

The pale yellow chrysanthemums with which on this morning the empty chair was decorated were the gift of the middle states. Beautiful red roses were upon the table in front of Mrs. Stevens' chair.

Mrs. M. J. Telford, president of Colorado, conducted the customary devotional service.

Mrs. S. M. I. Henry spoke briefly on the "Gospel of Health," the subject which had been assigned to Dr. Kellogg, but who, owing to a critical surgical operation which he had on hand, was unable to be present.

Mrs. Hammond, of Ohio, moved that the Hospital report be deferred. Carried by a vote of 80 for to 38 against.

Telegram committee reported. On motion of Miss Gordon, the committee was instructed to send a cablegram to Miss Agnes Slack, World's corresponding secretary. A message of love and regret was sent to the Countess Schimellman of Denmark, who had expected to be present, but was prevented by an accident. Messages were also sent to Mrs. Whitney, of Honolulu W. C. T. U., welcoming the Hawaiians to Mother National; and to our round-the-world missionaries, Mrs. J. K. Barney, now in London, and Miss Clara Parrish, in Burmah.

Moved by Mrs. Martin that the books of the treasurer be kept open until the next National Convention to receive life memberships for this memorial year. Carried. On motion, Mrs. M. G. Taggart, of Wisconsin, was made a member of the Convention, with all privileges except voting.

Then came the report of

WORK AMONG LUMBERMEN.

MRS. MARY C. UPHAM: The lumber interest is the largest industrial pursuit of over one-third of all the states in the Union, embracing not only the states on our northern border, but many states in the West and South as well. Thousands of men live in these dense forests from October to April of every year, away from all the sacred influences that have helped to make America great. We have followed them with our divine commission, "to bless all the world," and have been amply repaid by the gratitude of the men, and the better condition of camp life that is everywhere attested to. Manufacturers of lumber are giving their support and approval, and are sincere friends of our cause, believing that in this way we are doing one of our best works. The camp men are always with us as voters and factors in our republic, and the white ribbon influences can, in this manner, reach more men than in any other known way. Nearly every state now is systematic in its methods of work, dividing the camps among the unions, and sending all winter, by mail, weekly packages with an occasional box of the choicest home literature they possess directly to their special camp. The fact that all camp life grows continually better has been attributed to us by "outsiders," who do not show much sympathy with women and temperance. Reports have been received from twelve states, and the work never looked more encouraging or hopeful.

The minutes of Saturday were then read and approved. Rev. Anna Shaw and Miss Jennie Smith, who had arrived that morning, asked to be counted with the Crusaders, and the president requested that all Crusaders present register their names in a book provided for that purpose. The report of the executive committee was read and adopted.

The following resolution was offered by Mrs. Seberry, of New York, and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That this Convention highly appreciates the thoughtful and eloquent annual sermon of our World's and National Evangelistic superintendent with its beautiful tribute to Miss Willard and requests that it be issued as soon as possible by the W. T. P. A. in the same style as the sermon preached at St. Louis.

Then followed a department report, which, for obvious reasons, was of unusual interest this year, and which we regret cannot have more space here. We urge our women to send for the National Minutes, containing this and all other department reports.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

MRS. ELLA M. THACHER: The work done in this department by our white-ribboners all over our country can not be mentioned, but Mrs. Welles, at Chattanooga, Mrs. Stewart at Tampa, Miss Chase at Washington, Mrs. James at Jacksonville, Mrs. Rainey, state superintendent at St. Augustine, and their co-workers and helpers must be spoken of. All the summer these white-ribboners stood at their posts and prevented hundreds of boys from being drawn into the saloons and the house of ill-fame, cared for the sick, the dying, wrote letters, fed our boys in blue, and "mothered" many of these poor homesick ones who were so far away from home and mother. The union formed at Hampton, Va., in the Soldiers' Home, is doing fine work. A "Rest" has been opened in Phœbus by them, where seventy-five saloons breathe out destruction; sent twenty-nine dollars to the Fresh Air Fund in New York city, entertained the district convention of Virginia, and with their very capable president, Mrs. M. D. Bradley (one of our very own) is going on to greater and nobler work. The Sailors' Rest, which your superintendent formed in Philadelphia, is also doing a fine work. Over 1,000 men have visited the "Rest" in four months. An L. T. L. of forty-three children, a stamp saving fund of fifty-three depositors with seventy-five dollars deposited. A floating Christian Endeavor with seven members, a W. C. T. U. can be reported. Miss M. Louise Heimer, state superintendent of this department, and Mrs. E. P. Bosch, county superintendent, are helping to lead this on to greater fields of usefulness. Mr. H. B. Wyeth, the husband of one of our West Philadelphia white-ribboners, gave $500 to this work, so that we are enabled to keep two trained women missionaries at the Rest all the time.

My summary of the year's work is as follows: Four hundred and six meetings held, about 200 converted; 583 pledges signed, 98 soldiers put on the white ribbon, 135 visits made to hospitals, 20 visits to ships, 400 sick soldiers fed and cared for, 15,000 fed and helped, 828 sailors visited reading room, 312 attended wharf meetings, 203 evening meetings, 329 children in Sunday-school, 43 L. T. L. scholars, 5 shipwrecked sailors assisted, 1 sent to his home, 5 poor families relieved, 1 Sailors' Rest established, 1 Soldiers' Union organized, 620 petitions sent against the canteen, beside others for closing saloons on Memorial Day and for the Ellis bill; 323,900 pages of literature, 696 separate; 41 barrels of magazines, 225 boxes of delicacies, fruits, fruit juices, etc.; 100 religious papers, 230 leaflets, 173 bundles and 411 temperance papers; 10,555 tracts, 103 bound books, 700 text books, 5,525 pledge cards, 1,118 white ribbons, 500 flower mission cards, 1,090 souvenirs, 77,063 comfort bags, 132 housewives, 52 wall pockets, 106 button bags, 3 barrels and one box of clothing, 127 carnations, 200 bandages, 1,164 bouquets, 1,427 Bibles, 586 Testaments, more than $1,000 collected and disbursed. This is a large showing, but not one-half is here recorded.

Mrs. Thacher exhibited specimens of the comfort bags and housewives made by her corps of workers for the soldiers. The prize banner of the department was given by New Jersey to Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Cranmer moved that the National superintendent on behalf of the Convention send a letter of appreciation to Mrs. Welles and other workers for their untiring labors in this department the past year.

The special order of the day was called for, viz., the consideration of those standing rules which the post-executive last year had recommended as by-laws. The limitations of space forbid giving these in detail, and we must refer our readers to the Minutes of the Convention for the result of this consideration.

On motion of Miss Brehm the General Officers were appointed a committee to formulate a statement concerning the rights and privileges of life members to be incorporated in the constitution.

Mrs. Barker moved that the report of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association be postponed until Tuesday morning. Carried.

The secretary here read the following letter from Lady Henry Somerset to the Convention:

EASTNOR CASTLE, LEDBURY, Oct. 24, 1898.

MY DEAR SISTERS AND COMRADES:—"Mutual thought makes mutual presence," said the voice, which having once heard none can forget; the voice that I know to-day is ringing in your ears; but you hear it in memory only, and silence aches around you, bringing back afresh the sorrowful reality. In thought I am with you to-day, and I share with you the overwhelming sadness, I realize how empty is the platform, how terrible the task of those who are called to conduct the first Convention for twenty-five years without Frances Willard. Had I strength I would have crossed the Atlantic only to have been able to stand with you in the commemorative assembly that is gathered at St. Paul. Only to have shared with you in these memorial meetings, only to have endeavored to bring to them something of the spirit which she would pray must reign; but you meet in loneliness and you meet in difficulties, and, alas, you meet with differences grave and great, and my earnest prayer goes up to God that wisdom and strength may be given to those who stand at the helm of your vast organization, and patience and perseverance to the many who are enlisted in your ranks.

But although absent from our sight, I can not but feel that her spirit will be in your midst, that that beautiful presence which always brought with it a sense of harmony and peace will be allowed to hover round you, that she will direct your counselings with a greater power, a keener foresight and more heavenly wisdom than she did even when she stood in our midst. It is difficult "to bless His holy name for all those servants departed this life in His faith and fear," but although it be with blinding tears and broken voice, we can each one of us plead that we may be given "grace to follow their good example, and with them be partakers of that heavenly kingdom." Dear sisters, the only message that I can wave to you across the Atlantic to-day is a message of peace. Not "peace at any price," but rather peace, because that is more precious than possession. The real monument to the memory of Frances Willard can never be built with hands, can never be made of bricks and mortar, but must be reared in human hearts and human lives, and it is the great association that we represent to-day that is her noblest memorial. Therefore I pray that your deliberations may be carried on with the desire to act in strict justice; with loyal uprightness, with the determination to build up the spiritual rather than the material, and to believe that the welfare of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was the dearest thing her heart held. I know the great billows that are breaking over you; I know how hopes seem to be fading in your midst, how ambitions are vanishing. I well remember when I first went to Chicago, the pride with which I looked upon the Woman's Temple, and then I also remember how often a look of sadness would come over the face of our blessed one, and a little quiver in her lip as she would say, "Tillie is good, she meant well, but she built too large; it is a burden that I don't know how we are going to carry;" and then she would hope against hope, and she would believe that when the money was collected the women would own the Temple; but all the while I knew that at the bottom of her heart she dreaded the outcome. I am writing quite frankly, I have no motive for doing otherwise; I am no partisan; I only loved Frances Willard, and I love her still, and I think it right to put before this great Convention in unvarnished terms just how I knew she felt about it. In 1894, when last I was in America, I went with her to Philadelphia to meet Mrs. Carse, and the object of the meeting was to plead with Mrs. Carse to drop the idea of owning the Temple and to try so to arrange that the women should own their own floor and Willard Hall, but that everything else should go. How well I remember the Sunday morning when Frances asked me to interview Mrs. Carse, how she rocked back and forth in her chair, saying, "I wish Tillie would do what I want, it would lift such a burden from us, and we should own all we want of the Temple; and there is something bigger after all than houses made with hands." But Mrs. Carse, loyal to her great ideal, with a spirit which has always seemed to me absolutely undaunted by want of success and one never to recognize a failure, absolutely refused to listen to Frances. Anna and Mrs. Stevens were present, and will bear out all I say. Often and often after that we discussed the matter, and while I know that her heart was set in doing all she could to help the enterprise, back of it there was a great dread as to whether in the end it might not prove disastrous to greater work.

She believed that after the bonds were redeemed, the women would have the controlling power in the building; but we know now that such would not be the case, and it is this knowledge that must make you pause before you proceed with that which in the end will bring no real pecuniary benefit to the W. C. T. U. and which may cause such division in your camp that the dearest wish of Frances Willard's life and the holy work that she built up may be frustrated and demolished. My sisters, you have always been so good to me that I dare to speak plainly. I admire the energy that Mrs. Carse has given to her great design; but I cannot believe it wisdom to push an enterprise which does not seem to me to be for the best interests now of the society for which it was proposed. On the preservation of the W. T. P. A. Miss Willard's whole mind was bent. Over and over she would say and write that "that was the armory where the weapons and ammunition for the work is stored," and I pray that every effort may be directed towards building up that which was considered so essential a part of your work. But apart from that enterprise, the great spiritual forces of the W. C. T. U. must stand as a mighty leverage to uplift the people, and therefore you must for the future, it seems to me, keep clear of commercial enterprise and of all that may involve loss or gain save the great gain of souls and the loss of all that can hinder or weigh down your work. May God grant you wisdom to act, "as seeing Him who is invisible, who dwelleth not in temples made with hands, Whose you are and Whom you serve," and may every word that shall be spoken, may every debate that shall be entered upon, be in the sweet charity of our dear saint, who never said a harsh word of any, and who, like her Master, when He was reviled, "reviled not again." I have a deep sympathy with those who have given their life to the enterprise which is under discussion, but I believe that all work done for God is never wasted, but that in the future, perhaps, the very building you may never own may yet be allowed to stand as a memorial of what women wrought, for more is given to us, sometimes, when we clasp our hands in prayer and let the treasure go than when we eagerly grasp the thing our Heavenly Father does not design for us at the moment.

How tenderly I think of all your workers, of the dear, well-known faces, of the kind hearts, of the strong words, of the keen debate, which I remember so well in years gone by. I trust, if God gives me health or strength I may yet be with you another year, and I am almost looking forward to the possibility, if it is His will, of coming to you at your next Convention.

I pray for dear Mrs. Stevens in her difficult task. None valued her loyalty to her singleness of aim or her strong purpose more than our blessed Frances, and none knew better her sterling worth. Of Anna I hardly dare to speak; God comfort her, for He only can. I know how tenderly you will surround her who was so near to our beloved. Of Mrs. Stevenson, Mrs. Barker, Mrs. Hoffman and Mrs. Beauchamp, I think with true affection; and to you, dear sisters, I send my heart's love and loyalty, for we are bound not only by our common cause, by the knot of white ribbon that we wear, by our aim, by our holy vow, but we are bound to that world where she who is still our leader, holds out beckoning hands and bids us arise and follow till we, too, kneel at the feet of her Lord and ours.

Your affectionate and loving comrade,

ISABEL SOMERSET.

Mrs. Carse, who entered the church in the midst of the reading, hearing her name mentioned, interrupted the secretary with a request that that portion of the letter referring to herself be re-read. This was done. When Mrs. Hoffman had finished Mrs. Carse asked for the reading of the letter written by Lady Henry last June and published in white-ribbon papers of different countries. It was found that no copy was at hand, and as the time for the usual evangelistic service had arrived all further discussion of the Temple was deferred until afternoon. The Convention joined in singing the hymn, "Jesus, Saviour, pilot me," and it was asked that as a grave question was to be decided that afternoon the delegates pray earnestly for divine guidance. After fervent prayers from Rev. Anna Shaw, Mrs. Rounds and others, and the singing of "How firm a foundation," the leader, Miss Greenwood, called for minute testimonies concerning "the value of the Word." She said that no one could properly interpret the Word of God unless they could discern spiritually its deeper meaning, and that reverent criticism only brings out its beauties. Numerous, indeed, were the testimonies, three and four rising to their feet at the same time. We wish we had room to repeat many of them here. More and more are white-ribboners becoming impressed with the fact that, as Mrs. Henry said, "The Word of God is greater even than the Bible; the Bible contains only a little part of God's Word." When Miss Greenwood asked that all who wished to show their love of, and fidelity to the Word of God, stand, there was a unanimous uprising.

Miss Marie Brehm sang a beautiful solo by request, and there were sentence prayers from all over the house for wisdom in the decision to be made in the afternoon. In concluding this service the leader repeated the words of Philippians 2:3-8, and the Convention sang one verse of "Nearer, my God, to Thee."

The following department reports were then read:

FRANCHISE.

MARIE C. BREHM: The written report of this department represents but a tithe of all that has been done throughout the nation. Several state superintendents have written that their reports would be sent, but as they have not arrived can not be embodied in the report of the National superintendent. The twenty-one state reports received show that much good work has been done by our local superintendents. Considering that no legislative work has been done, which always proves an incentive to more active work, and that so few reports have come from the South, these reports show a steadily growing sentiment, which must bring victory ere long, and we shall see men and women together solving humanity's problems, each helping the other to rise to higher levels. Regretting the omissions of reports from so many states which have done good work, but whose reports came not in time to be incorporated, and trusting for an improvement along that line in the future, this report is respectfully submitted.

The remainder of the report is devoted to a statistical summary of work done in the different states and territories.

PARLOR MEETINGS.

MRS. MARY D. TOMLINSON: We are seeking to educate and to win workers, and I know of no better method in which you could expend labor than in inviting to your homes and hearts the uninterested, the uninformed, and, perhaps, the prejudiced women, who are comparatively sitting at ease in their homes, many of them ignorant of the vices which are alluring their children from their firesides. It is difficult to formulate methods that will be appropriate to the environments of every locality, so tact and originality of ideas must be brought into requisition by the superintendent of the local union. From the accumulated reports Missouri and Massachusetts are the most versatile. Missouri held parlor meetings at their state and district conventions. One union entertained the Teachers' Institute, and the teachers appreciated the hospitality. The St. Louis Y gave a lawn social at the home of the president. Over 1,000 people were present. An honorary tea was given by their honorary members in one of the unions. Massachusetts women discuss school elections, no-license, our various departments, Temperance Hospital, and local physicians speak upon non-alcoholics in medicine. Parlor meetings during the year, 2,503, with a gain of 1,527 members and 470 honorary members; money raised at these meetings, $4,641.68. New York has made the largest net gain in membership, and is therefore entitled to the banner; 446 members and 173 honorary members gained; held 829 meetings. Pennsylvania stands next, having gained 312 active and 121 honorary members; held 398 meetings. New Jersey is next in gain of membership.

PROPORTIONATE AND SYSTEMATIC GIVING.

MISS ESTHER PUGH: We find a toll bar across every avenue of Christian work demanding tribute ere we can proceed further, and the ingenuity of every one in service has been taxed to the utmost to obtain the needed payment. In these latter days the Spirit's searchlight has been turned upon the whole subject of Christian beneficence, and all organizations working "In His Name" are studying God's financial plan, and as one of the appointed educators in this evening of the nineteenth century the W. C. T. U. comes in to contribute of its force and strength in this research. Way back, long before Moses, we find the patriarch, the founders of the Jewish nation, giving the "tithe." Later we hear the vow of the solitary refugee registered, "Of all that thou givest me, I will give a tenth unto thee." Hence, is proven the establishment of the tithe long before the Mosaic law. Nothing laid down by that law is abrogated by the gospel. The great apostle says, "Let every one of you lay by on the first day of the week as the Lord hath prospered him." The latter clause has been given very wide latitude, but the bounds had long before been fixed, the standard set. Why this truth should have fallen completely into disuse for so many generations is inexplicable, only that it is the fate of truth. The year's work shows growth, slow but sure, twenty-four states having reported. Three states have been gained, none lost.

The Rev. Mr. Roeneke, pastor of the Dayton Bluff German M. E. church, was introduced. He expressed his own interest in the work of the W. C. T. U., and said that the German women of Methodism were warm sympathizers of the organization.

Mr. George F. Wells, editor of Backbone, the prohibition paper of Minnesota, was presented, and gave the greetings of the state prohibition party. He urged greater concentration on the prohibition movement.

The president then introduced the Rev. W. E. Shannon, who, she explained, had welcomed and aided Miss Willard when with Miss Gordon she had passed through Montana on that famous organizing trip in 1883. Mr. Shannon responded briefly and presented his daughter, a Somerset Y.

Mrs. Hoffman called attention to the beautiful orchids which had been brought to the platform that morning by Mrs. Cartland, of North Carolina. They were descendants, she explained, of a plant for which the owners had paid the sum of two thousand dollars. The delegates looked at them with awe, and as one of the blossoms was shaped like an S, some one suggested that it stood for "suffrage."

Mrs. Barker asked permission to read the report of the financial agent, Mrs. Baxter being unable to be present. This was granted, and the report was in part as follows:

This is the third annual convention since our promoted leader called me to the office of National Financial Agent. The field was untried, but I say to you now, that its possibilities are limited by our fears only. I have aimed to go safely. Every union in this nation, by this time, fully understands the aim and scope of the office. The $2 plan originated with me, and I have watched it prayerfully, hopefully. I recommend that, from this time forth, between the first and last of the month of January, the National treasurer be instructed to ask every union in the nation to give $2 for the field fund. That this fund be held a perpetual free-will, yearly offering in the name of Frances E. Willard. That the proceeds be used for field work, and that no per cent whatever be returned to any individual or state. This would be a great memorial of her, and would be exactly what she desired to see done. The coin, stamp and curio collection is no vision of the brain. One postage stamp of every issue of the United States and the Confederacy, and of the war, and internal revenue, would make us rich. We began to coin in this country in 1793. One perfect coin of every issue of this government—gold, silver, copper—would, without doubt, bring us a hundred thousand dollars or more. The amount of money raised by me, by personal solicitations the treasurer's book will show. It is not large, but has come entirely from the West. In the matter of finance let us think, then dare. For your past confidence in me, I thank you, and for the sake of the peerless woman who called me to this office, I beseech you to make the $2 memorial perpetual in her name. Then it will not have been in vain that this office was created.

MARION B. BAXTER,
Financial Agent.

Convention was dismissed by the Rev. Mr. Shannon.

MONDAY AFTERNOON.

After the Convention was called to order by Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, devotional services were conducted by Mrs. Winnie F. English. Mrs. Graham then sang, "Hide Thou Me."

THE PRESIDENT: According to the vote of the Convention, the first order of business this afternoon is the report of the Temple, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, president of the Board of Temple Trustees, Miss Sara G. Johnson, financial secretary.

It was moved by Mrs. Forbes that during the reading of the reports of the Temple and during the discussion which might follow, that applause on either side be suppressed. This was seconded.

MRS. ROUNDS: Does this motion refer to the delegates, or to the people in the entire house?

MRS. FORBES: It refers to the entire audience.

THE PRESIDENT: We can only control our delegates, but we would respectfully ask that others should try and behave the same as delegates do in this respect.

The motion was put to vote and carried.

Mrs. Carse stated that she would call for the reading of the letter from Lady Henry Somerset later on, and then read her report. Mrs. Carse's report covered fifteen printed pages, but we can give place to only a little of the historical part and that pertaining to the past year.

The Temple Report.

July 13, 1887, the Woman's Temple Building Association was incorporated under the laws of Illinois, as stated in the papers of incorporation. "To secure and construct a building suitable for a hall, auditorium and offices of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and such other offices as are necessary for temperance work. Incorporators: Matilda B. Carse, Frances E. Willard, Esther Pugh, William Deering and James B. Hobbs."

At Nashville, Tenn., November 18, 1887, the plan of the Temple, with a picture of the building, was presented to the National Convention and caused great enthusiasm, several thousand dollars being subscribed on the spot, Miss Willard giving her name for the first one hundred dollars.

In my report at the Nashville Convention I stated that the capital stock was $500,000, and that I had sold up to date, $100,000. I also stated that the ground could only be secured on a leasehold title at $35,000 a year, and that we had an option on the lot to January, 1889, as the lease could not be signed until the entire $500,000 worth of stock was sold. The lot was on the corner of Dearborn and Jackson streets, where the Great Northern Hotel now stands. In the winter of 1889 I had a fall that injured me so much, I was confined to my room for three months. I had not quite secured the placing of the entire $500,000 stock, and before I was able to resume work again the option had expired, and the price of the ground was raised to $50,000 a year, which we considered was too high. It was at this time my eyes turned longingly towards the lot on which the Temple now stands, and which was altogether the most desirable site available for a business block in Chicago. Although a much larger lot than the first one, we secured the refusal of it on a one hundred and ninety-eight year lease, without revaluation, at $40,000 a year. The capital stock was increased to $600,000, and by the summer of 1890 I had sold the entire amount. November 1, 1890, the corner-stone of the Temple was laid amid great enthusiasm. May, 1892, the building was ready for occupancy, and a large amount of space had been rented in it. In the fall of that year the financial panic commenced, which, as you all know, has held this country in its grip with unprecedented severity, until last winter, when a change for the better set in, but which had a severe setback this spring on account of the war with Spain. Thus it will be seen since the completion of the House Beautiful it has had strong seas to weather.

I have the pleasure to present to you to-day a most generous offer from Mr. Field. As there has been so much said in the papers he did not want me to make his offer public until I presented it to this body to-day.

CHICAGO, ILL., November 2, 1898.

Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, President Board Temple Trustees, City,

DEAR MADAM: — In order to enable you to make a clear and definite statement of my purposes in the matter of Temple debt, for presentation if desired, to the coming National W. C. T. U. Convention to be held at St. Paul, Minn., November 11, 1898, would say that if the friends of the cause evince sufficient interest in the enterprise to subscribe an amount that will pay off and cancel the remainder of the issue of $300,000 Temple trust bonds outstanding, I will, in fulfillment of my conditional agreement of February 16, 1897, subsequently renewed with regard to date of expiration to January 1, 1899, and which I am willing to still further extend to January 1, 1900, give $50,000 in stock; and to further help the cause I will donate in cash $50,000, same to be applied towards the payment of $20,000 floating debt, and $30,000 interest on the first mortgage bonds, which will be in arrears on December 1, 1898. Should the Temple trustees decide to abandon the enterprise, this proposition becomes null and void.

In the event of the acceptance of this proposition it must be understood that I am to retain control of majority of the stock of the building so long as the first mortgage bonds of $600,000 remain a lien against the same, and are held by the Field-Columbian Museum.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) MARSHALL FIELD.

His offer is certainly most generous, and stimulates effort in the hearts of all who desire to make the Temple Miss Willard's memorial. You notice he gives us until January, 1900, to pay off the Temple Trust bonds. When this is accomplished he gives $100,000—$50,000 in stock and $50,000 in cash, the latter to be applied to pay off all floating debts on the building, caused by the past years of financial disaster.

There is one condition in Mr. Field's proposition which may seem arbitrary. It is in regard to his holding the control of the stock until such times as we pay off the first mortgage bonds now held by the Field Columbian Museum, for which Mr. Field is security. All he means by asking this, is merely to secure the proper management of the building, so that it will pay the interest on the bonds, he stands surety for to the Museum. He has been most fair and just in the past in regard to this, and we have been under the same contract with him for several years. It was entered into when Miss Willard, Lady Somerset and myself got him to sign a contract to allow us to purchase his stock. Surely the fair and generous treatment he has accorded us should make us willing to trust him in this matter. We might as well at this point take an inventory of the amount in cash, bonds and conditional pledges we now hold toward the payment of the Temple Trust Bonds.

Subscribed by bondholders	81,000
Other cash subscriptions	30,700
Temple Trustees, cash	12,000
Miss Dow, custodian (approximate)	22,000
Total	$173,500

This leaves $126,500 yet to be secured, and if this convention passes a resolution to stand by the payment of the Temple Trust Bonds and make the Temple a memorial to Miss Willard, I will guarantee that the new year will find the entire amount for the liquidation of the Temple Trust Bonds on hand.

We have now coming to our aid the Young People's Christian Temperance Union, at whose head as president is Miss Eva M. Shontz whose love for Miss Willard and the Temple is without limit. Her splendid enthusiasm has fired the hearts of the young people of Chicago, and they are flocking to her standard 40,000 strong to save the beautiful Temple and make it a memorial to our fallen leader. They are now at work trying to raise $50,000 in Chicago to aid us in paying off the Temple trust bonds. If this convention will but pledge to stand by the payment of the Temple trust bonds, and all the unions who have collected money for the Temple and are holding it in their treasury awaiting the action of this convention, will send to us, and all who have collection cards would send as we have requested, four of these fifty-cent subscription cards to each of their friends, it would bring in from the cards alone $200,000, for we have over 400,000 still out. We sent out over 500,000 during the winter, at very heavy expense. The expressage alone cost $750. We have probably received about $10,000 from these, and no doubt a large amount has also been sent to Miss Dow.

The Temple Trustees stand ready as soon as you aid them in paying off the Temple trust bonds, to relieve you of the Temple as an affiliated interest. They will take the work upon themselves of raising the balance of the money to make the building Frances Willard's monument, and devote the income, when the building is all paid for, to the work which our great leader gave her life to build up.

Respectfully submitted,
MATILDA B. CARSE, President.

Miss Johnson's report was as usual an itemized one of considerable length. We give the totals.

AUDITOR'S REPORT.

I have carefully examined the books of the financial secretary of the Board of Temple Trustees, carefully comparing all vouchers for money received and expended, and find them correct.

Balance in Treasury November 1, 1898, ... $60,632.77
(Signed) WILLIAM H. DYSON, Auditor.

Mrs. Hoffman then read the report from the executive committee, ordered to be presented to the Convention immediately after the Temple report.

It was moved by Mrs. Chambers, of Pennsylvania, that the report of the executive committee be adopted.

MRS. CLARKE: I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there has been no motion to accept the report of the Temple.

THE PRESIDENT: The Chair would reply that this report which you have just heard of the executive committee was ordered to come before the Convention immediately after the presentation of the report of the Temple Trustees, and with regard to the Temple report, it is according to our custom, or not altogether against our custom, to delay action, for some of the reports presented last Friday afternoon have not yet been acted upon by the Convention.

MRS. DUNHAM: I wish, as secretary of the board of Temple Trustees, to make a statement and offer a substitute for the motion before the house.

Resolved, That, in view of the hearty indorsement given by the National Convention in Boston in 1891, to the Temple Trust Bonds, that the indorsement decided many to purchase the bonds, and that the moral obligation thus incurred by the National union toward the bondholders has been acknowledged again and again, we hereby pledge our co-operation to the Board of Temple Trustees in the retirement of the Temple Trust Bonds.

I move the adoption of this resolution, and I do not wish to speak on it now, but claim my right to close the debate. (Seconded by Mrs. Perkins, of Ohio.)

The Chair stated that the question was on the substitute.

MRS. WHITE KINNEY: I ask to have it made plain that we are not now going to discuss whether we are adopting the substitute offered, but simply will we substitute or not, or have the discussion on the report, rather than on the substitute that was offered.

THE PRESIDENT: The question then is, will you substitute the resolution by Mrs. Dunham for the report presented by the executive committee?

Mrs. Forbes, of Connecticut, called for a rising vote on the question.

Mrs. Benjamin asked for an explanation of the motion.

THE PRESIDENT: Mrs. Dunham offers this resolution as a substitute; now those who wish to have it substituted will please rise.

MRS. DUNHAM: I want to say a few words. You will notice, ladies, that the board of trustees have withdrawn the Temple as an affiliated interest. We ask you to continue to coöperate with the Board of Temple Trustees for the payment of the bonds. If you vote this substitute down, then you virtually place yourselves on record that you will not even discuss the question as to whether you will bear the bonds or not.

MRS. CLARA HOFFMAN: I protest against misleading the women; I protest against it. It has been done again and again. Madam President, we are simply voting which of these motions we will discuss, and it is perfectly in the province of this Convention to vote down either or both. It does not take the Temple out of the discussion at all; it simply is a choice of the Convention—will you discuss this motion that comes from the president of Iowa or will you discuss the motion that comes from your executive committees? That is the question.

MRS. PERKINS: I rise to a question of privilege. Can we not have Eva Shontz come to the platform? can she not have five minutes before the vote is taken? (Cries of "No, no.")

The previous question was moved.

MRS. DUNHAM: I do not present this resolution as president of Iowa; I present it as secretary of the Board of Temple Trustees.

THE PRESIDENT: The previous question has been called. As many as wish that the main question be now put, will please say aye. (Carried.)

A vote was then taken on the substitute and the same was lost. The president then declared that the report of the executive committee was before the house.

Moved by Mrs. Forbes that when the vote is taken upon the adoption of the report of the executive committee, it shall be by yeas and nays. (Seconded.)

Mrs. Benjamin asked for an explanation on behalf of those who did not understand; the president stated that the question now was on Mrs. Forbes' motion.

MRS. CLARKE: I wish to amend that motion by offering the motion that when the vote is taken on this question, that it be by ballot.

This is the most important question that has come before the Convention for many long years; we have no right to put anything in the way. (Seconded.)

MRS. CHAMBERS: Can the president of Michigan not come closer to the platform so she can hear better?

MRS. BENJAMIN: The president of Michigan can hear just as well down here; her hearing is not at all impaired, her understanding may be.

THE PRESIDENT: The Chair will rule that neither hearing nor understanding are impaired. (Laughter.)

Mrs. Benjamin again asked for an explanation, and the president gave a review of the action that had been taken.

The request was made that Mrs. Benjamin come to the platform. The President again stated that the question was now on the amendment offered by Mrs. Clarke, to the effect that the vote be taken by ballot.

Mrs. Forbes stated that she believed a motion on the yeas and nays could not be amended.

The President stated that she believed the motion could be amended.

Mrs. Benjamin came to the platform and the President introduced her as the superintendent of the department of parliamentary law.

Mrs. Benjamin asked that consent be given that the vote be retaken, and everything be done over again.

MRS. HOFFMAN: I rise to a question of privilege. If Mrs. Benjamin wishes to place any matter before us, will she state what is wrong?

MRS. BENJAMIN: I am not saying anything is wrong, for I do not know if there is or is not; but inasmuch as some of the delegates did not understand—(Many cries, "But we do understand.")

THE PRESIDENT: Can we find out how many delegates did not understand? Will the delegates who did not understand please rise?

As very few delegates rose, a motion was made that a vote be taken on the report of the executive committee.

The Chair stated that the amendment of Mrs. Clarke was before the house.

Mrs. Carse asked that the report of Miss Dow be heard before any vote be taken on the report of the executive committee or the Temple.

The president asked if there were any remarks on the motion of Mrs. Clarke.

Mrs. Hoffman stated that she would like to have the question settled as to whether the call for an aye and nay vote could be amended. The question was referred to Mrs. Benjamin.

MRS. BENJAMIN: It only requires a majority vote to order the vote taken by yeas and nays; all who do not want the vote taken by yeas and nays can vote "No" and then if you want to submit any other form of taking the vote you are at liberty to do so.

THE PRESIDENT: The Chair would consider, from what Mrs. Benjamin has said, that the vote is to be taken on the motion for a yea and nay vote.

MRS. CARSE: It is on Mrs. Clarke's motion.

THE PRESIDENT: That is thought out of order. The question before you now is, that when the vote is taken upon the report of the executive committee, it shall be by the yea and nay vote.

MRS. CARSE: Madam President and Ladies—

MRS. ENGLISH: Can the call for a yea and nay vote be discussed? (Cries of "No, no.")

A rising vote was then taken, and the call for a yea and nay vote was carried by 197 against 118.

On motion, the report of the credentials committee was now heard, and the report adopted.

Miss Anna Gordon then moved a reconsideration of the vote on taking a yea and nay vote, as she stated that Roberts' Rules of Order do not give among the list of motions that can not be amended, the call for a yea and nay vote, and she wished that everything should be done fairly and squarely, and that as the amendment could be considered, it ought to come before the house.

Motion to reconsider was carried; Mrs. Clarke renewed her motion, which was seconded, and Mrs. Clarke then spoke to her motion. She said in substance:

It seems to me that the precedent of a ward election in the United States ought to have some weight. If it is necessary for the men to have an Australian ballot in order to have a fair ballot, it is necessary on this occasion, when the lines are so sharply drawn; and when the women have their convictions so firmly set, to protect them from the remarks of other women.

Mrs. Forbes then spoke in justification of her motion, and said:

I claim that the yea and nay vote is the very fairest way in which we can decide this matter. Some of us who have been in this National Convention for a long time remember very well another occasion when a yea and nay vote was taken. I claim that if a woman on the floor of this Convention has her mind made up, she is willing to let the world know where she stands. I certainly am, and I claim that others are.

MISS PRESTON: I am opposed to the vote by ballot because of the time which it consumes. I believe, further, that every woman here is willing to stand up in her place and be counted, and we can have a standing vote, and it will serve the purpose just as well.

MRS. FORBES: I claim that time is of no account whatsoever. We have a constituency who ought to know how we stand on this question.

MRS. CARSE: There never was a more momentous question before us than this to-day, and I beg of you, my sisters, to allow us to have this vote taken by ballot. It is very well for Mrs. Forbes, and for the other ladies who stand at the head of their delegations to say, "I am not afraid to stand up." Of course they are not, but there are timid ones that often want to vote different from their leaders and they are too timid to do so. Now, let us have this vote by ballot, and let us know what the wishes of the women are.

MRS. HOFFMAN: I cannot conceive of a fairer way to vote than that which is universally adopted in all deliberative bodies. It is absolutely fair, there cannot be the slightest fear of a miscount when delegate after delegate rises and answers yes or no.

MISS ANNA GORDON: I desire a word of explanation. Personally, I strongly favor the yea and nay vote, but as some wished to have it by ballot, I wanted that question to be brought before the assembly.

MRS. DUNHAM: In calling for the yeas and nays, that of the chairman or the president must be called last, so that her vote may influence no vote. When you call the aye and nay vote to-day, the vote of the president of the state will influence the votes in that state to a greater or lesser extent, and that is why a vote by ballot is fairer.

REV. ANNA SHAW: We, of course, will follow the custom of calling the name of the president of the delegation last in order that these very timid women, whom we have sent here may be able to vote according to their convictions. My theory is, in regard to a body which has been in existence as many years as we have, who have stemmed such storms as we have, and stood for its principles as long as we have, that if we have sent women here who have convictions and dare not stand up for them, all the worse for them. I want to have the women who stand behind us and expect us to be true to them know exactly where we stand. I want the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to know where I stand on this question when the vote is taken, and I am in favor of the yeas and nays.

A vote was then taken on the motion to amend offered by Mrs. Clarke, and the same was declared lost.

The question then recurring on the motion of Mrs. Forbes for a yea and nay vote, the same was put to vote and carried.

Mrs. Ramsay asked the following question: If the report of the executive committeee is accepted, will it interfere with the discussion of Mrs. Carse's report?

THE PRESIDENT: The Chair would reply that the report of the executive committe will open up the whole question of the Temple, because involved in that report is the recommendation that the Temple be dropped as an affiliated interest.

The reading of Miss Dow's report was called for, and while Miss Dow was on her way to the platform, "Rock of Ages" was sung.

Miss Dow then read her report.

REPORT BY CORNELIA DOW.

Temple Trust Bonds—Eighteen One Hundred Dollar Bonds.

At the suggestion of Mrs. Barker, the clause in last year's minutes, relating to the disposition of money in Miss Dow's hands was read.

In response to a question Miss Dow said: "The custodian has reported simply money in her hands. She has not reported any pledge; she holds several pledges; the pledge of Miss Willard for $3,000 was on the condition that by the time this Convention was held the whole $300,000 were raised, and then that it could not be paid until the first of January, 1899, because it would not be $3,000 until that time."

Mrs. White-Kinney asked why it would not be $3,000; the question was referred to Mrs. Stevenson, who said: "As I understand the matter, Miss Willard was asked to donate $500 from this gift fund (the $3,000 given her as a birthday gift) to pay the debt of the W. C. T. U. restaurant in Chicago. She gave it, and the balance of the money is in Lady Henry Somerset's hands, being kept until it shall reach the original amount, and it was then to be placed in Miss Dow's hands."

MRS. CARSE: Miss Willard was not asked for one copper. Miss Willard gave it herself voluntarily, and we intend to repay Miss Willard the $500.

The president requested Mrs. Barker to explain why the General Officers had thought it right to buy the bonds of Samantha Fox.

MRS. BARKER: Samantha Fox wrote a letter to Miss Dow making a very urgent plea to save her home. It seems that she had put a mortgage on her home in order that she might help the Temple. She had been assured that these bonds would bear six per cent interest, that that would be paid faithfully every six months, and at their maturity that she would be paid the full amount of her bonds, and so she said, "Now, I can mortgage my home and give this money to the Temple, which will help the Temple, and I will get my interest, which will pay the interest on my mortgage, and the bonds will be due by the time my mortgage is due." But lo and behold, the interest was stopped on the bonds, and when it was likely that her mortgage would be foreclosed, she was notified that she could not have her money, and she wrote a pitiful letter to Miss Dow, and Miss Dow sent the letter to me. The case was then laid before Miss Willard, and Miss Willard left directions that these bonds, if possible, should be bought up, paying her a proportion, at least, and as Mrs. Carse had notified the bondholders that she would pay only seventy cents on a dollar and that no more interest would be paid, the bonds were bought at a reduction, as I understand it. A woman who had subscribed $1,000 wrote to our president, Mrs. Stevens, that the General Officers had permission to use her money where they thought it was most needed, and the officers thought that they could not find a more pitiful case than this woman's, who is well advanced in years, and who was likely to lose her home, and they ordered, as the Convention gave them authority to do, that this poor woman should have her money from the sum paid by the woman who gave us the permission, and Samantha Fox's home was saved.

THE PRESIDENT: The Chair would like to add to what Mrs. Barker has said, that probably what most influenced the General Officers to do what they thought was in a way irregular, in paying one bondholder (for the charge might be made that it was preferring bondholders) was the fact that Miss Willard had promised Samantha Fox that she should have the money before the time of the mortgage expired, even if she, Miss Willard, had to pay it herself in some way. That influenced us, and then the good woman who gave the thousand dollars said to us, "Use my thousand as you think best," and we thought best to apply it in that way.

MRS. ROUNDS: In view of this explanation which has been given to us in regard to the payment of the bonds of Samantha Fox, I move that this Convention ratify the action of the General Officers in that particular case and sustain them therein. (Seconded.)

MRS. SMITH, of Wisconsin: Is it honest for the W. C. T. U. to pay this woman, who is poor and needy, only a part of what she gave? Should they not pay the whole?

MRS. CARSE: I want to say, ladies, that that statement has not been made correctly. We paid interest on the bonds for five years; when the stress of the times became so terrible and the trustees could not get the money in any way to pay the interest on the bonds, we then sent a letter to the bondholders and stated to them the great depreciation in the value of the real estate and of other collaterals, and we said we will make a herculean effort to raise $300,000, if you will help us, and we will pay you what you put into it less as much as the interest that we have paid you. Now, what we have paid since the bonds were issued and sold, is thirty per cent. It is a great deal better for these people to get their seventy per cent rather than not get anything. And let me tell you we have further plans, for we do not mean that if we get that building anybody shall lose by it.

A vote was then taken on the motion of Mrs. Rounds to ratify the action of the General Officers in regard to the Samantha Fox bonds, which motion was put to vote and carried unanimously.

Mrs. Hoffman, at the request of several members, then read the motion of Mrs. Fessenden adopted at the last Convention.

Mrs. Babcock, of Rhode Island, asked for a statement of the interview had by the president and Miss Gordon with Marshall Field, to which the president replied that it would be given later and then stated that the adoption of the report of the executive committee was the question before the house, and the reading of the report being called for, the report was read.

MRS. HOFFMAN: I desire to speak to this motion. For ten years we have come up regularly to listen to pledges and we were always "going to do" in the next year and, at the farthest the next two years we were "going to do" these things that had been hoped for. We have now spent eleven years and we have raised about $250,000 and at one time we had a gift fund in clear cash from the women of this organization of $56,000 which was put into stock on which the Temple trust bonds are now a mortgage; now, we are asked to buy that back again and to pay $112,000 for the $56,000 that we once had, and we are told of the great things that are going to be done by the young people's societies, and by the pastors, and how the world looks at this and how Burma looks at it, and how the people all over the world look at it, and yet we listen to the report given by the financial secretary of the Temple trustees and to the report given by the custodian of the Willard fund and we find that only a few hundred dollars have ever been sent from any foreign country on the globe; and we find, too, in looking over the reports that the most meager sums have ever been given by young people's societies, and secretaries of philanthropic societies that have been pouring a perfect avalanche of telegrams to the secretary's tables from Chicago and from all around that we must stand by the Temple. I want to know whose business it is to decide this matter?

Allusion has been made to-day in the report that we have heard, to what Miss Willard said, and an appeal has been made to the women to stand by our beloved and translated leader, but care was taken not to give all the words that Miss Willard stated in her Buffalo address, and I desire, with permission, to read some of these words: "I shall not come around making any soft words to the local unions, nor to the states, nor to the white-ribboners, they have done enough; turn we now to the Gentiles. I shall only try to help." And again: "The white-ribboners shall not be disturbed, they have done nobly, they have become a little weary, and I do not wonder they are a little disheartened, and what I would like to do is to lift the burden." Why do we not hear these words? And, then, Madam President, I desire to remind these women, that it is the place of these women to decide this question and not the place of the young people's societies, and not the place of philanthropic societies that have never helped to lift the burden and have never tried to bear the burden, it is not their place to do this work, and to make this decision, and we are not pleased with their efforts to influence our decision. (Cries of "Hear, hear.") And I desire to remind the women that it has already cost us to issue and to float the $300,000 Temple Trust Bonds, which we never ordered and which we were weak enough to allow to go on,—it has cost us $164,700 to issue them. There is where the money has gone, and yet the $300,000 bonds are urged, and we are told about the moral obligation. Have we not discharged the moral obligation when we pay over all that we have, and when we say, "Here is the stock on which the mortgage is laid," and if it is a good investment for us, if it will pay for us to strain every nerve to gain it, then, certainly, it is a good investment for the bondholders. Do we not owe anything to the poor of to-day as well as to the poor of yesterday? Do we not owe anything to the poor women who are going without suitable warm clothing this winter in order to put their money into the Temple to help it out under these impassioned appeals? Do we not owe anything to the cause we represent?

It has been said since we gathered in this Convention that only the officers opposed it, the rank and file were for the Temple. What are your officers, from whence did they come, who puts them in their places? Every state president comes here by the vote of her constituency, she comes here because she is counted able to lead the women, and discredit is thrown upon her at the meetings that are held in opposition to the action of this Convention. Where have you ever seen a society so long-suffering, so kindly in its make-up, that it would permit its own members to go out and call meetings in other buildings and have a rally to whoop up and enthuse and carry on an action that was contrary to the plan that had been brought forward by the executive committee of the great society here represented, and yet that was done last year and that has been done this year, and then come these telegrams, telling us what we must do and what the world expects of us to-day. Why don't they help? And then the town is flooded with these expressions from ministers, and we are told what these great men, Dr. Hillis, Dr. Rogers and Joseph Cook think, and we find how much they know of the situation of this thing. We find that Dr. Hillis thinks we have only to raise $300,000 to own the Temple; that shows what he knows about it. Madam President, I do resent the interference of those that have no right under God's sunshine to interfere in this matter. It is said that we should only need $300,000; we shall need over $900,000 after we have paid the $300,000, and yet we are told this over and over again. I say, in the name of fairness and for the sake of our cause and for the sake of the poor that are being misled and being beguiled, and for the sake of her whose name we love, and in the name of this empty chair, I protest against such methods and such plans.

It was moved by Miss Gordon that there be a time limit for the speakers of five minutes.

Miss Preston moved to amend by making the limit three minutes.

Mrs. White-Kinney asked the mover of the amendment to add that each member be allowed to speak but once, which suggestion was accepted, and the motion as amended was then adopted.

MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY: I wish to speak entirely from a business standpoint. I have, in my hand, one of the Temple trust bonds, for which I paid the amount that is on the face of it. When I bought that bond I knew that the W. C. T. U. had not $300,000 in its treasury, and probably never would have. I would not loan a man $1,000 and take his note with no other security than the endorsement of the man who was not worth one-tenth of that money, therefore the W. C. T. U. was not back of it. The reason I bought the bond was that I wanted it for an investment only, the interest was then being paid regularly semi-annually, and the principal was secured, not by the W. C. T. U., but by the Temple stock, for which it could be exchanged, and that stock was reported to be worth its face value, and was itself secured by the Temple building, which was then considered to be worth all it cost. But with time the property has greatly depreciated, and hence the stock has depreciated. The W. C. T. U. is in no way responsible, either morally or legally, for this depreciation. It could not be legally responsible, for it has nothing with which to pay, and it is not morally obligated because the National Union as well as individual investors were mistaken in thinking it was a safe investment, as is fully proved by the fact that the union invested nearly all it had in the enterprise, and must suffer alike with other investors. The Woman's Building Association is an incorporated body; let that corporation continue the enterprise if it will, but let us relinquish it as an affiliated interest. We are under no obligations whatever to retain it, with the load of anxiety it constantly imposes upon us. I shall be glad, indeed, if the Building Association can pay for those Temple trust bonds, I should be glad to receive the money when it is ready to be paid, and I will then make it a present to the National W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Chambers, of Philadelphia, spoke of two documents which she held in her hand, from which she asked permission to read, saying, "The first I read is the contract that was sent to the National Officers when the $300,000 bonds were to be issued, and which the trustees, or, rather, Mrs. Carse, as an individual, asked Miss Willard to sign and which she declined to sign, as she said she would by so doing place not only a legal but a moral obligation upon herself."

The document asked the executive committee to authorize Mrs. Carse to issue bonds in order that she might secure the controlling amount of stock.

"When that was refused, the bonds were issued, nevertheless, and read thus: 'Whereas, Matilda B. Carse, of Chicago, as an individual—' It is so nominated by the contract, 'Mrs. Matilda B. Carse as an individual.' The responsibility is there, the moral obligation is there, and it should remain there."

MRS. CARSE: I want to answer those charges against me. It is necessary that I should correct at once the very grievous misstatements made by Mrs. Chambers. I call for the reading of the whole face of the bond.

Mrs. Chambers then read the whole text:

WHEREAS, Matilda B. Carse, of Chicago, as an individual, but for and on behalf of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and for its sole benefit, has acquired $100 of the stock of the Woman's Temple Building Association of the city of Chicago, an organization duly incorporated under the laws of the state of Illinois, and has caused a certificate of stock in said amount to be issued in the name of the American Trust and Savings Bank, trustee, to be held by the said trustee as security for this Temple Trust Bond.

DR. KANE: We have forgotten in all these deliberations that we are the servants of the Master, who long ago pronounced against our running into debt. (Dr. Kane then read a passage from the Scriptures.) We have gone deeper and deeper into debt, and by this time the whole world knows about it, and I say now is the time to stop.

MISS JENNIE SMITH: I feel sometimes as if I ought not to say anything because I have not been able to accomplish more in the raising of funds, but, do you know the eyes of the world are upon us. I heard saloonkeepers in Chicago say that they would have a jubilee if the W. C. T. U. gave up the Temple. It will be a blow to the cause of temperance from which the cause will never recover. Every woman who votes against the Temple will have to answer for it at the bar of God.

MRS. CARSE: I rise to answer the charges made by the president of Pennsylvania when she read a letter which should not have come up here at all, which never was sent out; I merely sent it and asked Miss Willard if it should be sent out and then I received this reply from Miss Willard. I want to say this, that it was at the time of that terrible persecution—I seem to have

WHAT IS CREAM OF TARTAR?

It comes from grapes and is yielded in the process of wine-making, most extensively in France and Italy.

Cream of tartar is brought in a crude state to this country, where three-quarters of the entire importation is refined to the highest grade in the works of the Royal Baking Powder Company.

This highly refined, pure cream of tartar—the product of the healthful grape—is the material from which a pure and healthful baking powder must be made. More expensive, of course, than other ingredients frequently used, but being healthful itself it adds healthfulness to the food instead of degrading it as do the baking powders that are degraded in quality to meet a degraded price.

The celebrated Royal Baking Powder is made of highly refined, pure and healthful cream of tartar. Its great qualities have made it famous in every country in the world, and it is the most appreciated of all baking preparations by all good cooks and up-to-date housekeepers.

had persecutions right along—but that was a terrible time of persecution when a man in Chicago and a coterie that had gathered around him persecuted me on every point that I undertook to do, and after I had got the building and got the stock subscribed, and the building was going up, then the largest stockholder got alarmed, and bought up the controlling interest in the stock.

MRS. CHAMBERS: The president of Pennsylvania is not accustomed to having her veracity doubted.

MRS. CARSE: (Continuing) That was in '91, when everything was booming and everybody said we had the finest site in Chicago for the Temple and one of the most magnificent buildings in the country; but this man with satanic evil in his heart sowed the seed of dissension, and Mr. Field commenced to buy up the control of the stock; then my issue of bonds came, and then was the time that I wrote to Miss Willard to see if they could not make me an agent or authorize me to act for the National W. C. T. U.

THE PRESIDENT: That was the time, was it not, when this request which has been read by the president of Pennsylvania went to Miss Willard?

MRS. CARSE: That is what I say, but it was never sent out.

THE PRESIDENT: And she declined to sign it.

MRS. CARSE: Now this is the letter that I got in reply; and it was written by this beloved woman in this chair to-day, Mrs. Stevens, reading, "St. John, New Brunswick, June 23, '91. Dear Mrs. Carse: Miss Willard has told me of the step you now wish to take in the interest of the Temple. She feels that she can not see her way clear to sign the document as you wish. I have no idea that the executive committee will favor it, and I would advise you not to wait to get any expression from them. As you always have gone on and acted individually so far as financial responsibility is concerned, why not now do what you think the best to raise the money?" Miss Willard also wrote a few tender lines, regretting that she could not sign.

A motion that the vote on this question be taken at six o'clock was lost.

Mrs. Chambers asked that Miss Gordon be asked to confirm the statement made by her in regard to the document sent to Miss Willard.

MISS GORDON: This printed letter which has been read was sent, all ready in a stamped envelope, to be sent to the members of the executive committee, hoping that their signatures would follow that of dear Miss Willard. Miss Willard received that circular in St. John, and said she could not take the responsibility of signing for the National W. C. T. U., and that she did not believe that the executive committee would, and the letter was written to Mrs. Carse that she has just read.

MRS. EMILIE D. MARTIN, of New York, said that she had been closely allied to Miss Willard for many years, and she knew that Miss Willard did not consider the bonds a moral obligation. Mrs. Martin also stated that her husband, who controlled large business interests, had given it as his opinion that the "surgical operation" should be performed.

MRS. CRANMER, of South Dakota, stated that she was sorry that the building had ever been commenced; she did not care very much whether it was ever owned by the W. C. T. U. or not, but she could not understand why the W. C. T. U. is not morally obligated to pay the $300,000 trust bonds; it was so understood by many who purchased the bonds, and it is so understood by the world.

MRS. GRAHAM, of Ohio, said in substance: The Temple stands there; it has been built; I have been interested in the Temple ever since that day when I heard Mrs. Carse give her idea of it in the National Tennessee Convention, when it was received with such enthusiasm. For the last ten years I have gone up and down many of the different states, in the local unions, and I have known of the interest that the rank and file has had in our Temperance Temple; and I feel that the interest that they have had in the Temple has brought hundreds and thousands of women into our ranks, and I know that the women of foreign lands have taken a great interest in it, and at the World's Convention and also at Toronto there was no branch of our work that was so full of interest as the Temperance Temple, and through that thousands became interested in our W. C. T. U.

MRS. WOODWARD, of Nebraska: I stand to-day as a trustee of the Temple, burdened with the great responsibility and willing to carry that burden. I am not willing, however, to carry a burden that does not belong solely and alone to the Board of Temple Trustees, and therefore I favor the motion as far as it goes that is now before us, and I will tell you why.

On the 25th of February the National officers, each one in turn in the office of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in the presence of a full board of trustees, when all the matters relating to Miss Willard's memorial had been placed before them, pledged each one without any condition whatever as to time, they pledged support of this plan. We have found that this pledge has failed us. We are now in this position: That as an affiliated interest of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, if we go out of this Convention as such, we have no assurance that there will not be an executive committee each three months, or each week for that matter, that will paralyze completely and perfectly, as it did this July 15, the work of the trustees in regard to the Willard memorial; therefore I do not oppose that this Convention shall sever this Temple as an affiliated interest, but I say here and now that to my astonishment, and the astonishment of many others, we have questioned here this matter of moral obligation for the first time, Madam President, on the floor of the National Convention. I stand here to contend, as a trustee of the Temple, as a member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, that this moral obligation shall be affirmed and reaffirmed until every woman shall have had her money, and if the bondholders are millionaires, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has still a moral obligation.

MRS. HAMMOND: I want to ask of Mrs. Benjamin if a body is obliged to sit and listen while its presiding officers are spoken evil of. (No answer being vouchsafed, Mrs. Hammond continued.) One person has said the watchword of the Crusaders was "Temperance." Now, dear sisters, we have got so far away that we have no watchword but "The Temple." When God called the Crusaders to get down on their knees in front of the saloons, and then to get up on their feet and go to work, He did not call them to build any temples, or schoolhouses or churches. I have two reasons why I do not believe in this Temple enterprise; one is, that it is taking the money out of our work and putting it into wood and stone; another reason is, because it is dividing our influence.

How to Get the Good of Wool Soap.

When you find that Wool Soap won't shrink woolens, don't use it alone on wool. Why be more careful of wool than you are of your face?

MY MAMA USED WOOL SOAP. I WISH MINE HAD.

Wool Soap is made on purpose to cleanse woolens without shrinking or injuring. The same ingredients that make it best for this purpose make it best also for the human skin. No roughness or redness follows its use. That shows that it's pure.

Wool Soap is always best wherever purity is necessary. Wool Soap is so pure that it is white—so pure that it swims. But some other soaps are that pure.

Wool Soap is the only soap so pure that it won't shrink wool. That's the supreme test, and only Wool Soap stands it.

Telegrams regarding the Temple were here read by Mrs. Tyng. [See list of telegrams.]

MRS. BUTLER asked a question: If the executive committee felt in duty bound to pay Samantha Fox her stock, why not pay the $300,000 of stock?

MRS. MARY H. HUNT of New York, stated that a few years ago she had invested some money in debenture bonds; in doing so she acted upon the advice of her minister who had been her personal friend for years. She lost her money, but she never felt that the minister who had suggested and advised the investment was under moral obligation to pay her back her money. He had also lost some money, and he was sorry, and she was sorry, and they both said that they would be wiser the next time. Mrs. Hunt thought that was a parallel case with the one before the Convention. The sums put into the bonds were investments, and every investor knows that the person who invests takes the risk, and does not feel that the friend who told him that that thing was good is morally responsible.

MRS. DUNHAM: It seems to me you are talking to something that is not exactly before you. You are talking to a recommendation for the discontinuance of the Temple as an affiliated interest; the board of trustees discontinued the Temple as an affiliated interest; the Temple Trustees voted themselves out, and they did it unanimously, and I do not know how you are going to vote us out when we are already out.

In regard to what Mrs. Hunt has said: Those bonds were not purchased by the different people merely on the advice of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, as she implies; they were purchased because they were for the benefit of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and there were several hundred people who did not want a dollar invested in an office building in Chicago, but who wanted the W. C. T. U. to have a home. And I want to remind you that the Temple Trustees, with Mrs. Carse, have never had a chance, because there has always been opposition. I spoke in the executive committee, and pleaded that the matter be left until the time of this Convention, so we could see what we could do, and they would not do it, and we had to struggle on in the face of this. How could you expect us to come up here with the Temple Trust Bonds paid? Remember, these bonds were issued by an individual for the benefit of the union, and therefore the union endorses them.

MRS. BEAUCHAMP: I would like to know if it is possible for any other body than the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union to drop an affiliated interest of this body? I would like the Chair to answer my question.

THE PRESIDENT: The Chair would answer in the negative.

Mrs. Montgomery stated that the report in the Temple column of THE UNION SIGNAL two weeks ago was misleading, and read a resolution adopted by the Massachusetts Convention last month, in which the action of the executive committee in regard to the Temple was sustained; she then added: "As in years past, Massachusetts and loyalty are interchangeable terms."

MRS. PERKINS, of Ohio: We read in THE UNION SIGNAL a few weeks ago that the sale of liquors last year was one hundred millions of dollars. If they can pay, in the city of Chicago, one hundred million dollars for strong drink, cannot all the temperance forces in the world pay one million dollars for the Temple? It has been argued that so much has been taken from the poor unions. They are not poor, for the unions that have made the greatest sacrifices and are willing to make more sacrifices and stand for the Temple, and the states that have held for the Temple have made the largest gains. I do not want it renounced as an affiliated interest, because I want the W. C. T. U. to have the honor and to have the glory when it is paid for. (Applause.)

MRS. HOFFMAN: I ask why the Chair rules out applause on one side, and permits it again and again on the other side?

MRS. BARKER: One side desires to obey the order of the Chair, and the other side prefers to disobey it.

MRS. MARBLE, of Michigan: There has been so much said here about having no moral obligation in regard to this. Here is a clause that it is "for the benefit of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union." They allowed that to stand on the bonds year after year, and I can not see why there is not some moral obligation in that. I went to the convention at Chicago. Mrs. Carse had a lawyer there, and there was question after question asked, and it was most heartily endorsed at that convention and it has been endorsed every year. People have bought the bonds, not because they knew Mrs. Carse, but because they believed in the honesty of these women.

MRS. WHITE-KINNEY: I think the chief point before us as Christian women is,—is there a moral obligation upon us? Now, friends, I want to ask you, what is a moral obligation? I have attended every convention for nineteen years; I was at the birth of all these affiliated interests, and I can tell you that every time one was proposed it was distinctly stated that the difference between an affiliated interest and an interest which we originated and which our own officers would control, was, that in an affiliated interest with its own officers, with its own books which we had no power to examine, that we were in no sense responsible for the financial condition of that affiliated interest.

MRS. LEITER: One speaker refers to the Nashville Convention. It was a room situated very much like this, and I sat farther on the side, and I remember when Mrs. Carse stood on the platform presenting her enlarged plans, and the picture in my mind is very distinct of the consternation that went over the faces of that audience, and when she saw it she said: "Do not fear, ladies, do not fear; I am not going to ask you to shoulder this; I am going out among the moneyed people and ask them to help," and every year whenever there was a fear coming up among us that possibly it might be laid at our door, for a number of years at least, we were met by that statement, "Do not fear, it shall never be laid at the door of the W. C. T. U.," until finally we found that somehow this grip was upon us and we were pledged to this business before us.

MRS. CARSE: Here are the minutes of 1887, when I presented that Temple to the Convention at Nashville, and my report is right in that book, and I can say to Mrs. Leiter that I did not say anything of the kind; I expected the W. C. T. U. to help me, and I say so right in there, that they were to help in it, and right there on the floor of the Convention there were $10,000 subscribed.

MRS. PAGE, of Washington: The statement has been made that the Temple has not interfered with state work. I wish to say that in our state we have one union that has not paid any dues for two years because it has a Temple debt that must be paid, and we have other unions that can not furnish money for local work that needed to be done, because they must send money to the Temple.

MRS. SMITH, of Montana: I can say of this Temple work, that it has interfered with our state work. We have less than 250 members, and yet you all know by the report that has been made that we have sent almost $500 to the Temple fund. How we have raised this money, no one knows but God in heaven, because we are a set of poor women, and we have not any men to back us, but we have sent the money, and we have not been able to do a thing for the superintendent of our field, and she, a poor girl, has taken the money out of her own pocket and carried on this work; and I do say that from this on we intend to put our money not in a hole, but where we can see the results.

MRS. WHITE, of Nebraska: It is not a question of "Can the Temple afford to give us up?" but "Can we local unions afford to give it up?" Only when we have a great cause to work for do we live, and only by our efforts to raise money for the Temple have we become known far and wide, and when we kill it we will be dead.

MRS. ROUNDS, of Illinois: I think that I shall have the sympathy of this Convention when I say that I am the president of the state that holds the three affiliated interests, and I want to say that the money that has been put into the Temple from my state this year, not counting the sums that have come from individuals not belonging to unions, amounts to $6,000. Now, Madam President, I think that a state that would send that amount of money to be put into a building or an enterprise said to be in the name and for the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union deserves some consideration, and when I asked the secretary of the president of the Temple Trustees for the names of the needy bondholders in my state, they were refused me.

Something has been said here to the effect that the state that put the greatest amount of money into the Temple enterprise had done the most local work and reported increased membership. I am sorry to say, it is humiliating to me, that while we have put in over $6,000 this year, that we have declined in membership. I hope the report of the executive committee will be adopted and that we will be cut loose from the Temple.

MRS. BENJAMIN: Will the Chair please state whether, if this should be dropped as an affiliated interest, it would prevent any individual, or any union, county, or state, or anybody, from contributing to the Temple just as much as they desire?

THE PRESIDENT: Certainly not if they want to.

MRS. CARSE: Mrs. Rounds said that she was refused the names of the poor bondholders. I want to say that we have offered to every state president the names of the poor bondholders in their state. We would not give the whole list.

MRS. ROUNDS: Madam President, I stated a fact. I asked Miss Johnson if I might have the names of the needy bondholders in our state, or the bondholders, and she said, "I am forbidden to give you them."

REV. ANNA SHAW: We have heard so much about poor bondholders—and they have my sympathy—

but there are other people who have put their money into the Temple beside the poor bondholders, and they are the poor W. C. T. U. women, who have worked day and night and all the time with the expectation that they would get back in rentals money to keep up the work in their own local organizations. They were promised an interest as much as the bondholders were promised an interest, and that out of the Temple they would get enormous sums of money to carry on the work, and because the women wanted this money to carry on the work they have contributed the money to the Temple, and to what they supposed was the payment of the Temple, in order that they might get the profit back. Why should we have more sympathy for the bondholders than for the working women all over the country, because we promised them to pay it back again? I would like to know why it is that we are held responsible morally to the bondholders and are not held responsible morally to these poor women equally with the bondholders? Now, when a man invests money and makes a poor investment he must suffer for it, and while Mrs. Carse does say, "I, as an individual, for and in behalf of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, issue these bonds," and these people buy the bonds in the interest of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, why are they asking us to pay for a thing they went into in our interests? Then it is said when we give up the Temple and have no great thing to work for that we will die. In the name of Heaven, if the only thing we have got to work for is the Temple, the sooner we die the better.

MRS. GRAVES, of West Washington, stated that until the clear-cut statement of the General Officers was received by the women of her state, the majority of the unions had worked in the belief that the ownership of the $300,000 trust bonds would give them the entire ownership of the Temple.

MRS. KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON: I want to call attention to the offer of Mr. Marshall Field in the letter read by Mrs. Carse; I hold a copy in my hand. It has been circulated very widely through the country that there is a new and very generous offer made by Mr. Marshall Field to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. May I read this? Perhaps in the interest in the report you did not note these special points: (Reads). Now ladies, I want to ask you how much better off is the Woman's Christian Temperance Union? Mr. Marshall Field had to put his hands into his pocket twice to pay $15,000 interest on the $600,000 building bonds; he will donate these $30,000 to pay himself back. He also donates $20,000 on the floating debt, which the General Officers in their statement (afterwards endorsed by the executive committee) did not consider of sufficient importance to note at all, and not one penny goes to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and after the $50,000 of stock has been donated, we still have to pay Mr. Marshall Field $68,400 for stock before we can have control of the Temple, and we will have stock, that according to his own statement, is not worth 25 cents on the dollar. I ask you, ladies, is it a good investment for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union?

MRS. TELFORD, of Colorado, referred to the statement that had been made that if some members of the union had kept still, some of the other members would have paid for the Temple, and went on to say that her little Colorado union had contributed more than twice as much to the Temple as all the foreign countries of the world and had held their peace year after year, but she thought it was high time that they said something now.

MRS. SCOVELL, of Minnesota, stated that the work for the Temple had not interfered with their state work, they having a gain in membership of 600, while having contributed $2,000 towards the Temple during the year. She stated that she believed that if the union were only bound for the $300,000, she believed the remaining $100,000, or so, could easily be raised in St. Paul alone, if only they would go out and get it from the people.

MRS. ELWELL, of Southern California, said that if her choice lay between saving a soul and saving the Temple, she would save the soul and let the Temple go.

MRS. BOOLE, of New York, said that she represented a state that during the past year had given more money to the Temple than any other state, $7,140, which was more money by $1,000 than all the state dues amounted to. She then went on to say: I want to say further that I wrote and asked for the list of bondholders in the state of New York; I received a reply that I might have the needy bondholders provided I would not tell who they were. I replied that I thought as acting president of the state of New York I ought to know who the bondholders were in the state and if they were given me in confidence I would keep it in confidence; but I did not receive a list of the bondholders. This matter was brought up in our state convention and both sides were heard and a resolution was passed indorsing the action of the National executive, advising the discontinuance of further effort in regard to the Temple.

I want to say for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the state of New York that had we had the $7,140 that went to the Temple this year, I believe we could have paid off every needy bondholder in our state. But the money is gone, and I know that some of them need their money; yet I do not believe the Woman's Christian Temperance Union ought longer to lend its influence or use its machinery in furthering any association over whose financial affairs it has no control.

Mrs. Stevenson moved the previous question after Miss Gordon's statement is heard. Carried.

A motion that Miss Gordon's time be extended if she desired to speak more than three minutes was carried.

MISS ANNA A. GORDON: Madam President, Dear White-Ribbon Sisters and Friends: I have attended twenty Conventions of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union; I have not missed one since I first went to a National Convention, and I have never before said one word about the Temple, pro or con. I have loved the Temple as so many of you have loved it, and I approach what I want to say about it with the deepest reverence and great grief for those who feel that if the affirmative vote prevails upon the report of the executive committee, it will make their hearts very sore. What was the Temple built for? It was built in the great hope that a revenue might come to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union that would help us carry the blessed work for which that society was started, for which it was born out of the Crusade movement; and also that there might be a center for gospel temperance work in Chicago when the Y. M. C. A. felt that the W. C. T. U. could no longer hold daily gospel temperance meetings in their rooms. So it seems to me the Temple has two distinct parts, the soul and the body. The soul is in Willard Hall, and the body is that great business enterprise upon which we looked, I think nearly all of us, with great reluctance when the plan was enlarged to a $1,200,000 building. Mrs. Carse will remember the letter she received from our dear Miss Willard when her original plan was changed to the larger building. About a year ago in Atlantic City, N. J., feeling very far from well, Miss Willard said one day, "I am going to dictate a number of things in a memorandum for you that I want you to keep as part of my record," and on the Temple she said: "I wish to put on record that I begged and besought Mrs. Carse, as my mother did, and all of us, to be content with a building costing one or two hundred thousand dollars as headquarters, and sent her a letter that I would not be responsible for the great enterprise into which she had launched, and I want it to go on record that I had no part or lot in such branching out. My Baking Powder Impurities.

How the Phosphate Powders are Made, and Their Influence Upon Health.

Reference has recently been made to the qualities of the phosphate baking powder, and it has been stated that the use of any agency which carries large amounts of acid phosphate of lime to the food is reprehensible. Harm to the digestive organs is liable to result.

Acid phosphates are useful in certain diseases, or may at times be given as a stimulant under conditions of exhaustion, but acid phosphate of lime can not be taken in the food day after day without detriment. An excess of lime phosphates unduly hardens the bones and also tends to produce gout and rheumatism; indeed, there are conditions, particularly with women, when a physician would not permit the use of lime phosphates even as a medicine under any circumstances.

Acid phosphate is used in making baking powders on account of its cheapness. The ingredients and process used by a well-known manufacturer in the preparation of phosphate baking powder are found in the records of the Patent Office at Washington, as follows:

Five hundred pounds burned and ground bones are placed in 400 pounds sulphuric acid (Oil of Vitriol), freshly diluted with 1,000 pounds water, and stirred from time to time for three days. The paste is mixed with farinaceous material, or with freshly burned gypsum, or with stearine, and dried and pulverized. . . . This pulverized acid is to be used with carbonate of soda in baking powders.

Bones of defunct animals are gathered in and about the great cities, battlefields, and wherever else they may be found in quantities, reduced to a powder with sulphuric acid, and this powder in the phosphatic baking and yeast powders is the substitute used in lieu of cream of tartar.

The sulphuric acid, with the lime and phosphorus of the bones, produce the sulphate and phosphate of lime found in the impurities of the phosphatic baking or yeast powders.

The United States government report on baking powders, issued from the chemical division of the Agricultural Department at Washington, exposes the extent and character of the impurities in the phosphate baking powders. It says:

"The salt used in this class of baking powders, acid phosphate of lime . . . is made by the action of sulphuric acid upon ground bone, the result being an impure phosphate with calcium sulphate. The sulphate of lime is very difficult to get rid of, and most phosphate powders contain considerable amounts of this impurity."

The government analyst of the Dominion of Canada says that he found in the best phosphate powder in the market nearly ten per cent of sulphate of lime, which substance, he states, must be injurious. Almost all so-called phosphate powders are now made with the admixture of alum. Such powders, says this authority, "are still more objectionable than the alum powders."

For the purpose of raising cake, biscuit, and other quickly made bread foods, nothing has yet been devised equal to the cream of tartar baking powder. The official tests by the United States and Canadian governments show that baking powders made from highly refined grape cream of tartar do better and more even work, and leave no phosphate, lime, acid, or injurious residuum in the food.

mother had no peace of mind until this was done, as you will remember, and I want this always to be a part of my record."

Why did she stand in Buffalo only one short year ago, and say those memorable words that the President of the Board of Trustees has quoted in your hearing this afternoon? I believe from all I heard her say at that time and afterwards, that she not only had the needy bondholders in mind, (and she did most fervently hope that they might be paid) but she loved the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, for which she has given her life, and she said, "This great burden must be lifted from their shoulders. They have hoped against hope; they have tugged and toiled; they have come up each year to hear these hopeful plans and wish they might be carried out, and most of them have tried faithfully to bring them to a successful issue, and yet here we are with friction growing in our ranks, and I must do something to stop this if I can." So, not only thinking of the bondholders, but wishing that there might be an end to the struggle, so far as the W. C. T. U. is concerned, she made that memorable statement in regard to what she would do in the 59th year of her precious life. I know the history of that self-sacrificing work. You know, dear Mrs. Carse, how she went with you up and down in Chicago to see wealthy women and wealthy men.

MRS. CARSE: Only three persons we visited.

MISS GORDON: Mrs. Carse reminds me that they succeeded in seeing only three persons, but Miss Willard also wrote a great many letters. She did the best she could and grew discouraged that those outside the W. C. T. U. did not feel like giving even for the payment of the Temple Trust Bonds. When we reached New York she saw others there, even when so far from well, and I honestly believe those pathetic words about the Temple, which were among the last she ever spoke, were words of hopelessness because she saw that even this last supreme effort was unavailing. Later, when Mrs. Stevens and I came to Chicago and learned how comparatively small an amount had been received up to July 1, I said, "If that dear, blessed saint felt so hopeless, then how are we going to shoulder this tremendous enterprise now that she is no longer with us?—and when we have tried to make it a memorial, and the General Officers have joined so heartily with the Temple Trustees, and even then there is no response that would warrant us in going on with our appeal." I love these young people that have been so enthusiastic to make the Temple a memorial, and I am not going to say anything that I have not said to them. I have said to their leader, "It cuts me to the quick that you go on using that dear woman's name to raise a fund, begging and beseeching and imploring people to give, when the response has not seemed to warrant your believing that that is the memorial they want for her. Do not let it appear as if they were not willing to give to a memorial for the grandest woman that has ever lived."

I have been asked to say something of the interview with Mr. Marshall Field. Mrs. Stevens and I came on from Boston in June last, after I had spent a month in England, and I had heard not a word of discouragement in this effort that was being made to raise the money for the bonds, but when we called on Mr. Marshall Field we learned from him that the $50,000 he had promised would be in stock, as has been stated, and we learned that even when the $300,000 were raised, after which he would give the $50,000 of his stock, the W. C. T. U. would not have a controlling vote until it had purchased from him $68,400 worth of stock at par, the balance of $118,400 owned by him. To-day we learn from his letter to Mrs. Carse that $600,000 building bonds must also be paid off before we could have a controlling vote in the Temple enterprise. Mr. Field said to dear Miss Willard and me in the interview that we had a year before, and he repeated it to Mrs. Stevens, that he did not believe the Temple would ever pay running expenses, and, dear sisters, it seems to me that if we are not going to get revenue from that building, but find it a mighty struggle to pay for it, we ought to put our money directly into the work of strengthening the principles of our organization and extending the work, and let that be our memorial to Frances Willard.

In closing I want to answer personally a charge that has been brought against me. I do not think the dear women who said it realized what they were saying, but they have said that I was disloyal to Frances Willard! (Cries of "Shame, shame," and "Never, never.") Dear sisters, many of you know that I have well-nigh laid down my life to carry out her sacred wishes, and I believe if she stood here this afternoon she would say, "You are doing right; it is hard for you to take that position, but I believe you are doing right," for dear Miss Willard has left on record letters in which she said, "If by the termination of this year we cannot raise the $300,000, I believe we should disassociate ourselves from this enterprise as an affiliated interest," and so I have taken the position I have this afternoon.

The roll was then called on the question of adopting the report of the executive committee.

The secretaries announced the result of the vote as follows: Yeas, 285; nays, 71.

THE PRESIDENT: The Chair announces that the report of the executive committee is adopted by a vote of 285 against 71, and the Temple is dropped as an affiliated interest. You voted not to have any applause, and I hope the same kindly spirit will lead you on and on, and that those who have a majority vote will not applaud in their hearts or in any other way. I hope you will observe in this, as you do in so many other ways, the Golden Rule.

Mrs. Dunham then renewed her resolution. By agreement the consideration of the resolution was postponed until the next day.

Mrs. Hoffman then read the following resolution which had been adopted at the general executive meeting in July, and which was now adopted by the Convention.

Resolved, Third, That our sincere appreciation be extended to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the founder of the Temple, for the brave effort she has made to secure for the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union the building which she has always

MONDAY EVENING.

State Benefit Night.

"Following the somewhat turbulent meeting of the afternoon, the evening session was like the peaceful calm of a midsummer night." Thus did the St. Paul Pioneer Press not inaptly describe the proceedings of Benefit Night. The program was arranged by the presidents of those states having made a gain of five hundred in membership during the year. They were seven in number, viz., North Dakota, Kansas, Minnesota, Southern California, Indiana, Ohio and Texas.

The debate upon the Temple resolution had lasted until nearly 8 o'clock, and as the Convention adjourned people were coming in to attend the evening meeting, and many delegates did not leave the church at all during the half hour's intermission.

The music of the evening was in charge of Professor Gehan, director of the Catholic cathedral choir.

Following is the order in which the winning states were represented. The speeches were short, witty and impromptu. We give extracts from each:

NORTH DAKOTA.

MISS PRESTON: The first speaker labors under peculiar disadvantages, as she has no means of knowing how large the stories which the state presidents who are to follow will tell in regard to their states, and therefore cannot gauge her remarks accordingly.

North Dakota is, in some respects, the greatest state in the Union. I do not refer to size, although we could take in Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and then have room in a corner for New Jersey and Delaware. Neither square miles nor population can make a state great; the greatness of a state depends only upon the character of its people. We have the cream from several quarters of the globe. We have some of the best people from Puritan New England, from the great Dominion of Canada, from England, Scotland, Norway, and Sweden.

North Dakota is a great state because its people demanded by their ballots that it should be born into the sisterhood of states free from the curse of the legalized liquor traffic, and they have kept it free.

The breezes that sweep over the prairies of North Dakota bear on their wings no fumes from any legalized rum hole. The public schools of North Dakota are not run by money wrung from the hearts of women worse than widowed and children worse than orphaned. The saloonkeeper in North Dakota is no longer a political boss, he is a criminal and an outlaw. And, best of all, each succeeding year under prohibition finds the law better enforced and public sentiment more strongly in its favor.

North Dakota is the greatest state in the Union because it has the largest number of white-ribboners in proportion to the population of any state. There is one paid up white-ribboner to every eighty of the population, including men, women and children.

This year we have made a great effort to increase our numbers as a memorial to our promoted leader, Frances E. Willard, believing that no more fitting memorial could be given her than that we strengthen and build up the great work to which she gave her life.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

To our lasting regret our stenographer was not present when Mrs. Mary A. Kenney, of Southern California, made her speech, which was one of the best of the evening. We asked Mrs. Kenney to try to recall some of the bright things she said and write them out for us. She agreed to do so, but the copy has not yet reached us. Following this address, Mrs. S. V. Harris rendered a solo which was received with marked favor by the audience.

MINNESOTA.

MRS. BESSIE LAYTHE SCOVELL: I am glad to have the feeling to-night that I am in the East. When I have gone to Conventions farther east my hostesses have asked me about the terrible cyclones in my state. One hostess asked me in a very patronizing way whether I had ever been East before. Another had asked me and my friends to be very careful and not break things. In Boston a Christian Endeavorer had taken great pains to tell the Minnesota delegation not to blow out the gas. But to-night I feel that I am in the East, because all the speakers on the platform except two live west of the Mississippi. The word Minnesota [she explained] means sky-tinted water. We have the beautiful Lake Minnetonka; we have Minnehaha Falls; we have ten thousand beautiful lakes in Minnesota, and the father of waters rises in Minnesota, so that we are pre-eminently situated and named for temperance work. One would suppose that with all this water that God has given us, this would be the drink of our inhabitants, but I am sorry to say that we have many thousand saloons in Minnesota, but I believe the time is coming when we can point to our laughing Minnehaha and say to the world that that is the proper substance to drink and that that will be the drink of Minnesota.

Prof. Christian Balatka, a celebrated pianist of Chicago, here gave two of his beautiful selections.

KANSAS.

MRS. ELLA W. BROWN (who, the president explained, is a practicing lawyer), said: Kansas raises immense fields of corn and has not a distillery in the state. It has immense vineyards and not a large wine-cellar in the state. From the beginning boys and girls have had equal school advantages. From the beginning women have had school suffrage, and I am proud to represent Kansas because of the record that has been made at our reformatory for boys, where not a single drop of alcohol has been administered. Mrs. Brown then introduced some of her associates—"samples of Kansas women," she called them—who had helped to make it possible to gain over five hundred members this year. Mrs. Helen Harford, the organizer; Mrs. Zayner, who had added 1,032 members to the L. T. L.; Rev. Anna Ray, superintendent of peace department; Mrs. L. A. Case, a district president; and last, the state treasurer, Mrs. E. Hutchinson, who made a wise collection speech, after which these Kansas women sang their state song and to Mrs. Tiney was awarded the cash prize of the miners' department, this being the third time Kansas has won it.

OHIO.

MRS. ANNIE W. CLARK: "What is that that is round at both ends and high in the middle?" Somebody answered "Ohio." We are told, she continued, that in hieroglyphics the circle always stands for eternity. We have two of them, and the consequence of this is that Ohio is eternally high in her ideas. Speaking of the boundless agricultural resources of Ohio, Mrs. Clark said she felt impelled, like Silas Wegg, to drop into poetry:

"And the corn grows so big, that without braggin'
A great many ears will fill a wagon;
And oats and 'taters without measure
Fill the farmer's heart brim full of pleasure."

The Ohio Woman's Christian Temperance Union had been organized before the National, and she said, it was in the home of an Ohio white-

CATARRH OF THE STOMACH.

A Pleasant, Simple, but Safe and Effectual Cure for It.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs, and difficult breathing; headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue, and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do, and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlandson the safest and best treatment is to use, after each meal, a tablet composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal, and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drug stores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthy appetite and thorough digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher, of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition, resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach, thus producing catarrh of the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure; but to-day I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I can not find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book mailed free on stomach troubles, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. The tablets can be found at all drug stores.

ribbon woman that Frances Willard had first received her mission to go forth and preach the gospel of equal suffrage.

Mrs. Clark introduced the state corresponding secretary, Miss Frances Ensign, well known as a Y organizer and lecturer, while the Ohio delegation rose to its feet and the question, "What's the matter with Ohio?" brought the usual response, "She's all right!"

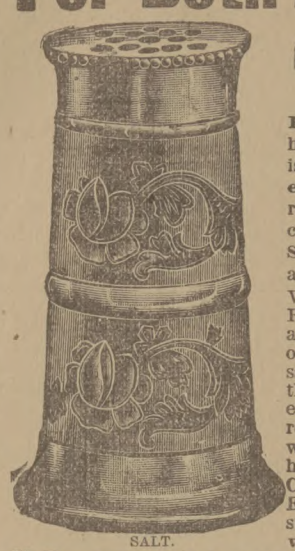
TEXAS.

MRS. HELEN M. STODDARD: Our latitude on the north is in the same latitude as southern Kentucky, and on the south the same as that of the southern part of Florida. There is milk and honey enough in Texas to flood Massachusetts six feet deep. We have room enough in Texas for almost everybody, but there is not room enough in our state for a prize fight, and I wish I could say there was not room enough for a saloon. But I can say that one-half of our great territory is under local prohibition.

Mrs. Stoddard then introduced several of her co-workers and together they sang one verse of the state song.

INDIANA.

Mrs. Stevens then asked Miss Gordon to say a word, and she came forward carrying the beautiful prize banner—white satin with golden stars and this inscription in gold letters: "W. C. T. U. Membership Banner, St. Paul Convention, November 14, 1898. Given by Frances E. Willard." "This," said Miss Gordon, "is the star-spangled banner of the white-ribboners. It was designed by Miss Willard and is the same as the one that is draped on her chair. She always loved it near her, and we kept it near her just as long as we could. She intended to present it in person this year to the winning state. She stated that Indiana had made a gain of 1,150 new members within the last year. They had lost 750, she said, by death and removal, so this really made a gain of 1,900. "All the way through the year," she added, "these women had been prompted by their affection for Frances Willard and the promise she had made at Buffalo that she would personally give a banner to the state that made the largest increase in membership, and so, while it is an honor and a pleasure that I have been asked to present it, I wish that another hand than mine might have placed in the hands of Mrs. McWhirter this beautiful banner."



In receiving the banner MRS. MCWHIRTER said: I accept this banner with a heart filled with gratitude for the loving service and the loyalty of the white-ribboners of Indiana toward Frances Willard and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. We did not work for the banner, we did not expect to get it; we went home from Buffalo determined to do all that we could to raise the standard of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Indiana, and we have done it.

Mrs. McWhirter then introduced her supporters and spoke appreciatively of the earnest efforts they had made, one organizer having secured 102 members in ten days. Professor Balatka again favored the audience with one of his inimitable renderings. By request he played "The Sweet By-and-By," and the Convention adjourned.

THE BOW OF PROMISE

The BOW OF PROMISE is a fitting companion to Finest of the Wheat Nos. 1 and 2, and more than two million voices attest their great superiority.

COMMENDATIONS

From JOHN F. HILLIS, Evangelist: "Dear Sirs: I have carefully examined your new book, 'BOW OF PROMISE,' and am delighted with it.

"I feared that in getting out a new book you could not equal 'Finest of the Wheat No. 2,' but I have concluded that dear old 'Finest of the Wheat' has been surpassed by this new collection of songs. It ought to have a ready sale."

From C. E. CHAPLER, Swaledale, Iowa: "I received a sample copy of 'BOW OF PROMISE' some time ago and have examined it carefully and am much pleased with it. I think it is a fitting successor to your other excellent books. Many thanks for same."

From J. W. STOKESBURY, First Tenor of Missouri Conference Quartette: "The 'BOW OF PROMISE' and sample pages ordered came to hand, and I have carefully examined every new piece in the book and they are gems, every one, which, with the older pieces, make it a collection of songs that has not been excelled.

"I have used both Nos. 1 and 2 of 'The Finest of the Wheat' since they made their first appearance, and I think this is as good, if not better than either of them."

From Rev. ROBERT BAGNELL, Le Mars, Iowa: "I received 'THE BOW OF PROMISE' and like it very much. I predict for it great popularity. It is fully equal to 'Finest of the Wheat No. 1' which in my judgment is the best Sunday-school and Evangelistic book we have ever had."

From Rev. E. S. MILES, Hyde Park, N. Y.: "We like 'THE BOW OF PROMISE' very much. The first lot was gone all too quickly. Must have some more as soon as we can get them."

In Remembrance of Miss Willard.

During the last few weeks Lady Henry Somerset has been occupied at Eastnor Castle in modeling a statuette in loving remembrance of her friend and fellow-worker in the temperance cause, Miss Frances Willard.

The statuette is about eighteen inches high, and represents Miss Willard in that attitude which was peculiarly characteristic of her, as she used to stand on the platform making her unique and eloquent speeches. The left hand is extended, as it always was, in a sort of generous offer of tender help and blessing to the humanity she so lavishly loved. Her dress falls in graceful folds, and the bow of white ribbon, her beloved emblem of temperance and purity for all the world, adorns her left side. Lady Henry has succeeded in catching and embodying the truly spiritual characteristics of Miss Willard, and brings before us the much-loved idealist, who seemed able, as no other, to uplift our souls to the heavenly spheres where she herself always dwelt. Her fine features and beautifully shaped head, with the abundant hair, have been faithfully reproduced.

A number of casts have been taken of this statuette, and it is intended that these shall be sold and the proceeds devoted to the Industrial Farm Home at Duxhurst. It will be remembered how strong was Miss Willard's interest in this Home for Inebriate Women, the central hall having been named in her honor.

Arrangements are being made to have copies produced in America. Price and further particulars will be given in a later issue.

The President of Washington, D. C., Goes West.

Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, for several years president of the District of Columbia, and her son were introduced to the Convention at St. Paul, and announced as on their way to their new home in Seattle, Wash. Mrs. Platt's husband, whose ill health takes them to the far west, and her daughter had already preceded them. Mrs. Platt was given a farewell reception before leaving Washington in the First Congregational church, on her wedding anniversary, October 21. She was presented with a silver tea and coffee service, a half dozen spoons, a half dozen knives and forks and a purse containing forty dollars. A large crowd was present to show regret at her departure. Dr. Muir, pastor of the E Street Baptist church, made a most appropriate prayer, and Mrs. J. H. Robinson, president Northwest union, made the presentation speech. Mrs. Crosby, superintendent of foreign work in the District, presented a handsome bouquet. Many warm friends saw Mrs. Platt and son off and gave them a hearty Godspeed.

Greetings.

The General Officers of the National W. C. T. U. to All White-Ribboners.

To be Read in the Local Unions.

DEAR SISTERS OF THE W. C. T. U.:—As your General Officers, we send to you our New Year's greetings. We realize that it will be very hard for you to receive this letter without the dear, familiar signature which for so many years has been appended to all official communications. But we are cheered by the thought that she is inspiring and leading us to-day as in the past. Those who were present at the National Convention at St. Paul must have felt this in an especial degree. In whatsoever bright and beautiful world she is now working, her interest in the women who for so many years she led forward to victory is not lost, we are sure.

As the last Convention was her Memorial Convention, so this year is to be in an especial degree her memorial year. More and more the conviction is borne in upon our hearts that nothing else can so fittingly express her life of unceasing activity, her beautiful, helpful spirit, as an organization consecrated anew to the great work to which she gave her life, an organization reaching out ever anew, striving for higher and higher ideals, making its principles a power among the nations of the earth. This memorial we beg you to build during the coming year. Our call goes out to every member of every local society in our great and growing nation. We are bound together by a tie strong and sweet. No one can be excused from this work of building this memorial to the white life and sacred memory of our beloved leader. Will you, dear sisters of the local unions, pledge at your next meeting that your special effort this year shall be to increase your membership and redouble your interest in every line of work?

It was a significant fact that the white-ribbon star-spangled banners were Miss Willard's last gift to the state, district, county and local unions which had made the largest increase in membership during the year. The gleaming banners, as they were passed to the women entitled to receive them, seemed to say for our loved one, "Go on and let your light shine; let the stream of life of which you have partaken flow forth to others. Bring many more into this glorious fellowship of ours that is 'a union of all who love in the service of all who suffer.'" Dear sisters, will you heed this call, and will every local, county, district and state union in the nation set the white-ribbon star-spangled banner as the goal of its ambition for the coming year, not simply for the banner itself but for what stands back of its possession?

The call to observe February 17 as a Frances E. Willard Memorial Day will, we trust, appeal strongly to each one of you. It will be helpful to the local unions in studying her character and life. You can glean from her books and from "The Beautiful Life" which has been given to us the past year. You can not fail to arouse in the minds of those who are present at these meetings a desire to emulate that life. From the proceeds of the meeting you will, we feel sure, send two dollars direct to the National treasury to be used as a fund for sending this light on to others. It is proposed to do this year such organizing work as has never been done before. The most needy fields are to be visited, and there is to be a campaign for the better establishment of our righteous principles in every state and territory in our Union. By all means observe this day, or if it is not convenient for you to hold the meeting on the exact date, hold it as nearly to that as possible.

Memorial Life Membership, which was begun at St. Paul, will be continued during the year. It is the purpose to list these life members by themselves with the heading, "Memorial Convention Life Members." Fifty-two were secured at St. Paul, and several other names have been sent in since our return to Headquarters. Some choose to give the names of their departed friends, and we call them Memorial Members. We earnestly hope that this may be carried on all through the year, and that there may be no state, no large city, no prominent worker not represented in this true roll of honor. (The payment of twenty-five dollars constitutes life or memorial membership.)

Again, we urge you to renew your interest in the work of total abstinence, of pledge-signing and of the education of the children. We have passed our twenty-fifth milestone and are starting out upon a new crusade. We should start with renewed devotion to the cardinal principles of our work, which are total abstinence, prohibition and purity. We can not better enforce these principles than by working for the children. There should be such an increase of interest in our Loyal Temperance Legion work as no previous year has witnessed, and to this end we ask you to observe the new L. T. L. red-letter day, July 21. Side by side with this goes our work for the children in the Sunday-school, the introduction of scientific temperance into the public schools, medal contest work, the kindergarten, and indeed everything that affects the lives of the rising generation.

We ask you also to remember the new red-letter day which has been appointed for THE UNION SIGNAL, March 1, when each white-ribboner is requested to secure at least one new subscriber for THE UNION SIGNAL. Our official organ is the right arm of our power, and only as we build that up can our work be carried forward successfully.

Some of you may be grieved over the action of the Convention with reference to the discontinuing of the Temple as an affiliated interest. We are more and more firmly convinced that we could not have done other than we did and remain true to our constituency and to our principles, and we feel that this action has the approval of our promoted leader. We are confident that the results will be good and not evil, and that we shall go forward to new achievements as never before. We have already received many tokens of good cheer and of material help. We beg you to look carefully at the matter from all standpoints and not to judge until you understand perfectly why this action was taken. The Temple is no longer a part of the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Our organization is separated from it and we ask each individual member to consider carefully whether or not her work would not better be put into the legitimate lines of the W. C. T. U. rather than into that which we are convinced is a hopeless cause.

The next National Convention will be the silver anniversary of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. At St. Paul we celebrated the silver anniversary of the Crusade, but when we meet next year at Seattle, it will be twenty-five years since we were organized. We have a little less than twelve months in which to roll up the sum total of the work of a quarter century. There should be such effort, such devotion, such consecration in these twelve months as shall make a record never made by this or any other organization. Remember what our dear Miss Willard used to say: "If only each one would get another member, we would double our membership." Comrades, let us do it this year. "Give to the winds thy fears" anew; God has already led us forward to victory; He will still lead us on and He commands us to ask largely that our joy may be full; let us ask in faith and then let us supplement the asking by such a doing as shall tell through the centuries.

May the coming new year be a blessed one to all, and a harmonious, fruitful one to our great organization.

May God's peace abide in all our hearts and may we together hasten the coming of His kingdom.

Notes and Comments.

MRS. STELLA B. IRVINE writes the good news that after all Convention expenses have been paid there remains a balance of about $300 to be divided among the local unions of St. Paul. This item will be especially comforting to societies which invite the National Convention to meet in their cities.

AS is the invariable custom, prayer-meetings were held each day at 8:30 A. M. during Convention week, and the spirit of consecration which marked the deliberations of that assembly was due to the fact that so large a number of our women went each morning from their knees to the business of the day.

IT will be a source of gratification to our constituency the world over that our National president, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, has been chosen to fill another place made vacant by the promotion of our dear Miss Willard, that of editor-in-chief of THE UNION SIGNAL. Her election to that position gives pleasure all round—to the women of the W. C. T. U. and to all connected with the W. T. P. A., and binds firmer the tie which exists between the two organizations and their representatives at Headquarters.

SOME of the press comments concerning our National Convention have furnished no little entertainment for those who are more familiar with our organization than is the average daily newspaper reporter. For instance when a W. C. T. U. woman reads about our "forty affiliated interests," she at first stands aghast at the chaotic possibilities these words suggest, then she repeats them to a comrade and together they make merry over this and other wild statements of the press. But the reporters have in the main been kind to us, and they were heartily thanked by the Convention, to which thanks THE UNION SIGNAL desires to add more on its own account.

ONE of the many great object lessons presented by the National Convention, and one which attracted much attention, was the pledge chain of the Sunday-school department. These red, white and blue cards strung together and festooned in triple form around the church contained the signatures of boys and girls of the Sunday-school to the threefold pledge, viz., against intoxicants, tobacco and profanity. "Over five miles of the chain were on display," said Mrs. Irvine, "as it was estimated by a gentleman to whom I referred the matter and the cards represented only an infinitesimal part of the chain, which is so long that we could have canopied the church with it."

JOHN G. SHORTALL, of Chicago, publicly advocates the establishment of the whipping-post as the most effective punishment for wife-beaters and for minor offenses where the prison penalty is not sufficient to act as a deterrent. In a summary of interviews upon the subject with prominent women, the Chicago Tribune quotes Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, National president of the W. C. T. U., as follows:

I am decidedly opposed to flogging. I am opposed to capital punishment, and, naturally, do not favor the whipping-post. It will not prevent crime, and is brutal as a corrective. It is not effective or just punishment even for a wife-beater. Such a man commits his offense while under the influence of liquor or of his baser passions. He is not himself. He can be reached through the doctrine of love, but not through the whipping-post.

Miss Jane Addams expressed almost exactly the same sentiments, while the other women interviewed spoke favorably of the measure.

OUR beloved Miss Willard used to extol the richness of the English language, but who of the white-ribbon comrades present at our great annual rally did not realize the utter inadequacy of words to express the sense of loss imparted by the vacant chair! But, paradoxical as the statement may seem, some of us could not —perhaps because we would not—realize that she had left us forever. We had been so accustomed to having our strong and true Mrs. Stevens wield the gavel during Miss Willard's temporary absences from the platform that it was quite natural to see her presiding, and had it not been for the memorial nature of the Convention, we could have imagined that she who for nineteen years had been our beloved leader, was only attending an executive meeting in a near-by room and would presently come in in her "chipper" way and with one of her quaintly humorous, little speeches, resume the duties of presiding officer.

Twenty-fifth Annual Convention National W. C. T. U., St. Paul, Minn.

Memorial.

(Concluded.)

TUESDAY MORNING.

Devotional services were conducted by Mrs. Ella M. Thacher, of New Jersey.

The empty chair this morning was bright with roses of different colors arranged by the western states and the organizers.

On motion, Mrs. Dunham's resolution concerning the Temple Trust Bonds was made the special order for three o'clock.

Mrs. S. L. Oberholtzer, by request, read to the Convention the following original lines suggested by the memorial service of Saturday:

Not empty is the chair,
For lo! the sunlight there,
Rests with a radiance fair,
As though it touched her hair.

Ribbon and flower and star
That emblematic are
Of her so near, so far,
Are hallowed by the bar.

Our faith looks up anew
This vision in our view.
Shine ever God's light through
That we her path pursue!

Mrs. Ingalls asked that the distribution of circulars advertising headache powders, which were being handed around among the delegates, be stopped. The Chair ruled that such distribution was out of order and would not be permitted.

The president introduced Mr. Cummings, representing the National Temperance Society and Publishing House, who spoke a few words of greeting.

She then presented Miss Margaret E. Sudduth, former managing editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, saying: "We know that Miss Sudduth is still one of us and that her ready pen is at our service and we believe will continue to be so."

"I am truly glad," said Miss Sudduth, "to look into your faces to-day, for this is the first National Convention that I have ever really seen. I have attended others, but those were in the days of the DAILY UNION SIGNAL, and I have heard your proceedings chiefly with the ear and the pencil." Miss Sudduth referred to her adopted state of Southern California, saying that the crusade fire burns as brightly in the hearts of the women of the Pacific Coast as it does in those of the women of Ohio and New York, and she hoped that some glad day the great Convention would go to the City of the Angels.

Mrs. Tyng, chairman of committee on telegrams, reported.

Mrs. Mary F. Lovell, of Pennsylvania, offered the following resolution:

In view of the wholesale destruction and threatened extinction of whole species of beautiful and useful song birds for millinery purposes, and the consequent, rapid multiplication of insect pests and serious menace to the agricultural interests of our country and the world; and in view of the manifest inadequacy of moral suasion and esthetic motives to prevent the wearing of birds and parts of birds on women's bonnets; that we earnestly pray that Congress will pass a law prohibiting the sale by hunters or milliners of any bird plumage except ostrich feathers.

Rev. Anna Shaw said that she was in full accord with the mover of the motion in respect to its being wrong and wicked to kill, not only birds, but other animals for the purpose of wearing their feathers or skins, but that she was opposed to a body of women appealing to a body of men to pass laws in regard to their wearing apparel.

It was moved as an amendment that the resolution be adopted, with the exception of the appeal to Congress, which amendment was lost by a vote of 107 yeas to 67 nays. The resolution was then voted upon and carried.

Mrs. Joseph, of Louisiana, offered a resolution in regard to lynching, which, on motion, was referred to the resolutions committee.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved. The report of the executive committee was read and adopted.

It was moved that the managing editor of THE UNION SIGNAL be presented to the Convention, and the president introduced her, saying: "It gives me very great pleasure to present the faithful and true editor of our official organ, Mrs. Susanna M. D. Fry."

MRS. FRY said in part: A little while ago one of the editors of one of the leading church papers complimented THE UNION SIGNAL by saying it was the grandest and finest reform paper in the world. (Applause.) Now I quote this simply to say that if it is not the grandest reform paper in the world, it ought to be, and it can be with such a constituency behind it. We were told last year when we put forth our prospectus that we would give the W. C. T. U. indigestion, because we had about one hundred great reform writers whose names figured in that prospectus. They did not know your powers of digestion as the hotels and hostesses of St. Paul do, or they would not have said anything of the kind. But, ladies, remember this, we want in THE UNION SIGNAL the spirit and plans and methods of this great world-wide organization, and there is not anybody in the world that can give it but you.

The hour for the election of officers having arrived Miss Greenwood was called to the platform to lead in prayer. The Convention sang "Guide Me, oh, Thou Great Jehovah," after which acting president, Mrs. Stevens, called Mrs. Scovell, president of Minnesota, to the chair. The final report of the committee on credentials showed the total number of delegates present as 371. Tellers were appointed as follows:

Distributing tellers, first set: Mrs. Harriet D. Walker, Massachusetts; Misses Belle H. Mix, Iowa, and Carrie Lee Carter, Missouri. Second set: Mrs. Mary E. Balch, Indiana; Misses Marie C. Brehm, Illinois, and Anna Miller, Kentucky.

Counting tellers, first set: Misses Kate Lunden, New Jersey; Emily F. Miller, Maine; Louise Hollister, Minnesota. Second set: Mesdames Mildred A. Dorsey, Arkansas; E. M. Cobb, Nebraska; Cora E. Seberry, New York. Platform teller, Mrs. Addie N. Fields.

While the ballots were being counted, the Rev. Alice Ruth Palmer, fifth round-the-world missionary, now of Minnesota, was introduced and told of the "latest evolution of the W. C. T. U., the country pastor,"—a product which, taking Miss Palmer as its representative, white-ribboners have every reason to be proud of.

Mrs. McWhirter of Indiana, said that while Miss Palmer was introduced as a member from Minnesota, she was sent as a round-the-world missionary from Indiana.

Something was said about Indiana trying to claim all the honors of the Convention, and Mrs. Stevenson declared that Massachusetts was going to have the prize banner next year. Then said Mrs. White-Kinney, "In order to take from these two noble women and their states a bone of contention, I wish to announce that Oregon will have that banner next year."

A delegate from Indiana rose to remark that their state could swallow Massachusetts up in one of its gas wells. "Talking about gas," retorted Mrs. Clark, "always brings Ohio to its feet; when the ladies talk about taking this banner, they have got to take Ohio into consideration."

MRS. CRANMER, of South Dakota: What is a banner compared to a ballot? (Great applause.)

The report of the counting tellers on informal ballot for president was then read, as follows: Votes cast, 356; blank ballots, 2; Rev. Anna Shaw, 1; Mrs. S. M. D. Fry, 1; Miss Helen Hood, 1; Mrs. Caroline Buell, 1; Mrs. N. M. Stevenson, 1; Mrs. B. L. Scovell, 1; Miss Belle Mix, 1; Mrs. K. L. Stevenson, 2; Miss Anna Gordon, 2; Mrs. White-Kinney, 2; Mrs. Hoffman, 4; Miss Marie C. Brehm, 1; Mrs. Benjamin, 1; Mrs. Hunt, 3, Mrs. Rounds, 3; Mrs. Marion Dunham, 5; Mrs. Fessenden, 7; Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, 317. (Great applause.)

REV. ANNA SHAW: As a defeated candidate, I move that the informal ballot be declared formal, and that the secretary be instructed to cast the vote of this Convention for Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens as president.

MRS. HOFFMAN: As another defeated candidate I second the motion.

The motion was carried unanimously.

MRS. HOFFMAN: It is with great pleasure and great heart's ease that I cast the vote of this convention for one of the most level-headed and God-fearing women that I know of to-day, L. M. N. Stevens.

Mrs. Stevenson and Mrs. Hoffman were appointed to escort Mrs. Stevens to the chair, while the Convention sang "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

MRS. STEVENS: Beloved comrades, I know that it has been hard for you to write upon your ballot for president the name of any other than you have been writing for nineteen years, the name of the one who has been your joy, your love, your hope, your inspiration in this work. If it was hard for you, how much harder is it for me to stand here and try to respond and try to thank you. For twenty-four years I worked with Miss Willard; I have wanted to do hard things for her, and the harder they were the better it suited me. I never dreamed that she would go away and leave me to act for her, even for a few months. When she went I did not know how to go on, with "so much gone of life and love." I do not know now what to say nor how to thank you, but believe me, did I not know that she still lives and loves and leads, I could not stand here by that chair which we have been calling empty. Do not say that her mantle falls on me, rather let us say that it has fallen on us all, and may we not go on striving to follow in her ways, striving, above all things, to extend and perpetuate the work to which she consecrated her great life. With this understanding I accept, and I thank you. I will try to serve you in the name of her Christ, in the name of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

Holding in her hands a large bouquet of roses MRS. HANNAH J. BAILEY came forward and said: On behalf of the Maine delegation it gives me great pleasure to present to our beloved and honored state president, now our National president, these beautiful flowers with our love and congratulation.

MRS. STEVENS expressed her thanks for the flowers in a few loving words, and then said:

It is now my privilege to nominate a vice-president-at-large. One beautiful summer day one year ago last August, when Miss Willard and I were riding through one of the pine groves of Maine, with the clear sky above us and the bright sun shining on her radiant face, she talked to me about our work, and she said: "I am not as strong as I used to be; I know you do not want me to talk to you about this"—for I did not want her to, but she continued, "I may go away, and I want to say something about Anna." You know about Anna Gordon; I need not talk much about it, friends, but Miss Willard spoke of the time when Anna Gordon came to her, cultured, refined, fitted by birth, education and environment for any position into which a young, beautiful girl might enter, and she said, "Anna has served me for nearly twenty-one years, and served the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, merging her life into mine, helping me to do so many things which otherwise I could not have done." Then she talked on and on, as the birds sang, and then she said, "Some day it may come to you to let the women know about this and to place Anna where she can serve in a different way from what she has been serving these many years." She said, "I hope some day she will be vice-president-at-large of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union." Dear comrades, I am going to ask you now, by the change in a by-law, to make it legal and possible for me to nominate Anna Gordon as vice-president-at-large. And let me say, that among the records which Miss Willard has left was a memorandum, "Anna Gordon, vice-president-at-large of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union."

Mrs. Barker then read the by-law referred to by the president, and moved that the same be amended to read: "She may also nominate a vice-president-at-large."

The motion was seconded by Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, who stated that Frances Willard had said to her at one time, "I want the women to know Anna Gordon for what she is some day, and not for what she has been to me, and I hope the day will come when you will have the opportunity of speaking of it."

The motion to amend the by-law was carried unanimously, and the president nominated Miss Anna A. Gordon as vice-president-at-large.

Mrs. Benjamin moved that she be declared elected; seconded by Mrs. White-Kinney and unanimously carried.

"Jesus, Saviour, pilot me,
Over life's tempestuous sea," sang the Convention, as Miss Gordon was led forward by Mrs. Hoffman and Mrs. Stevenson, and stood by Mrs. Stevens' side, roses in her hand and her eyes resting on the flower and flag-draped chair—

"Chart and compass come from thee,
Jesus, Saviour, pilot me!"

MISS ANNA GORDON: Dear sisters, I have had many hard things to do since dear Miss Willard went away, but I think this is almost the hardest thing I have had to do, to listen to these words that have come to me for the first time. There could be no higher service than to serve Frances E. Willard, and how I have loved to do it! And since she has gone to live with God, but her spirit is with us still, I esteem it the highest joy of my life if I can help this blessed woman beside whom I stand at this moment. I can not tell you what Lillian M. N. Stevens has been to me since February 17th. I wish I could; some day perhaps I can. Frances Willard made no mistake in appointing her vice-president-at-large, but I am not so sure that she has not made a mistake. I have knelt with her in prayer, and I thank God now for such a devoted, earnest Christian, such a clear-headed president, one who has that sweet grace of humility, and one who is so strong in faith and in courage. You have not taken my work, then, away from me, and it will be a natural and sweet thing to do all in my power to hold up the hands of the president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

It was moved that telegrams be sent to Mr. Stevens in Maine, the husband of Mrs. Stevens; to Anna Gordon's mother and to Lady Henry Somerset, advising them of the elections. Carried.

The report of the tellers on the votes for corresponding secretary was then read. Number of votes cast, 354. Blank, 1; Mrs. J. B. Hilton, 1; Mrs. K. L. Stevenson, 1; Mrs. J. T. Ellis, 1; Mrs. Margaret Ellis, 1; Mrs. Oberholtzer, 1; Mrs. White-Kinney, 1; Mrs. Helen Bullock, 1; Miss Belle Kearney, 1; Mrs. Frances Barnes, 1; Miss Frances Ensign, 1; Mrs. Helen Harford, 2; Miss Elizabeth Greenwood, 2; Mrs. Marion Dunham, 2; Mrs. Clara Hoffman, 2; Mrs. Bessie L. Scovell, 4; Miss Margaret Sudduth, 8; Mrs. Louise Rounds, 8; Mrs. Caroline Buell, 15; Miss Marie Brehm, 21; Miss Helen Hood, 29; Miss Anna Gordon, 46; Mrs. S. M. D. Fry, 204.

On motion of Mrs. Scovell this was declared the formal ballot and the secretary instructed to cast the vote of the Convention for Mrs. Fry. Mrs. Stevenson was appointed to conduct Mrs. Fry to the platform, which she did, introducing her successor in a few fitting words.

MRS. FRY replied in part: I never went into anything in my life that I could not ask God's blessing upon. I never went into anything in my life that I did not pledge all that there is in me for it. I think I have got into the biggest thing now that I ever did get into, and I pledge to you heart and soul to do the very best I can, and you will help me, won't you? (Cries of "Yes, yes.")

The noon hour having now arrived, Miss Greenwood led in a brief service of prayer, prefacing it by a loving, loyal tribute to the Christian life and character of our new president. Mrs. Harriet Walker prayed tenderly for the new officers, especially for Anna Gordon, "in whose face was seen suffering and yet the touch of God's own glory." The Convention sang as a prayer this one verse:

"Open Thou the crystal fountain,
Whence the healing waters flow,
Let the fiery, cloudy pillar
Lead me all my journey through;
Strong Deliverer, strong Deliverer,
Be Thou still my strength and shield."

While waiting for the further report of the tellers, Dr. Crafts addressed the Convention. He referred to the W. C. T. U. as the greatest law-making body in the United States, and stated that most of the laws that are really laws under the Gladstonian definition of making it easier to do right and harder to do wrong, were made through the influence of this organization.

The tellers then announced the following result of the informal ballot for recording secretary: Votes cast, 351; blank, 1; Mesdames Thacher, Rounds, Beam, White-Kinney, Fry and Miss Gordon, each 1; Mrs. C. N. Woodward and Mrs. Carse, 2; Mrs. Buell and Mrs. Conklin, 3; Mrs. Beauchamp and Miss Kearney, 4; Mrs. Dunham and Mrs. Scovell, 5; Miss Hood, 8; Miss Brehm, 15; Mrs. Hoffman, 293.

It was moved by Mrs. Dunham that the assistant secretary be instructed to cast the ballot of the Convention for Mrs. Hoffman as recording secretary. This was done and Mrs. Hoffman declared elected.

MRS. HOFFMAN: I am surprised at the vote you have given me. I expected that a great many would vote against me, because I am never negative; I am always positive. I speak and declare my opinions very clearly and you have not all agreed with me, and I had the pencil all ready sharpened to present to the new recording secretary. So I am surprised, and I am pleased, too, for of course I like it better when you vote for me than when you vote against me. That is human nature, and I thank you very much indeed for your confidence in me.

Mrs. Hoffman was presented with an exquisite bunch of carnations by the Missouri delegation.

She nominated Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp as assistant recording secretary, which nomination was endorsed by a rising vote and Mrs. Beauchamp declared elected.

Mrs. Beauchamp expressed her thanks in a few well-chosen words, and was presented with "posies, too," from the National superintendent of the press department.

Mrs. Emilie Martin read a document relating to army regulations, issued by Lord Wolseley, and asked that a copy of the same be sent to Secretary Long, of the navy. On motion, the matter was referred to the executive committee.

It was moved that the soldiers of the Fourteenth Minnesota regiment be invited to attend the evening meeting of the Convention; which motion prevailed and Mrs. Thacher was appointed to extend the invitation to the soldiers.

The informal ballot for treasurer was announced as follows: Total number of votes cast, 350. Blank, 1; Mesdames Clark, Boole, Beauchamp, Benjamin, and Misses Hood, Sudduth and Brehm each, 1; Miss Shontz, 2; Miss Pugh, 4; Miss Dow, 6; Mrs. Dunham, 41; Mrs. Helen M. Barker, 289.

On motion of Mrs. Ramsay, of South Dakota, the secretary was instructed to cast the ballot of the Convention for Mrs. Barker, and she was declared elected.

MRS. BARKER thanked the members for their continued confidence, and in closing said: "My heart is sad to think that as I go back to Headquarters Mrs. Stevenson, who has stood by my side for four years, will not be with us, and I want to say that a more faithful, earnest worker there never was at Headquarters than Katharine Lente Stevenson. (Applause.) She goes back to Massachusetts to her own women. We shall miss her, but I welcome most heartily Mrs. Fry, good and true and strong, who takes her place.

MRS. ELLIS moved that the Convention, by a rising vote, express thanks for the arduous labors of our retiring corresponding secretary, Katharine Lente Stevenson. Carried unanimously.

MRS. STEVENSON was called on for a speech, and she said: "I cannot make a speech. I have been glad to do what I could; you have helped me a great deal better than possibly anything I could have done for you. I thank you with all my heart, and I love you just as well when I am back in Massachusetts as when I was at Headquarters. God bless you all. I feel as though every woman of the white-ribbon army had a place in my heart, and I think I have just a little bit of a place in the hearts of a great many of you, for which I thank God."

Announcements and adjournment.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

Miss Mary A. Lynch, president Thurman W. C. T. U., of North Carolina, read the Scriptures and offered prayer, after which the following reports were read:

KINDERGARTEN.

MISS WILLIAMSON: The National W. C. T. U. should be more actively interested in the great kindergarten philosophy and movement which is rapidly revolutionizing the entire educational system, and being recognized by the best and broadest minds of the day as the solution of our present great social and moral problems. Some one has truly said, "The tiniest bits of opinion sown in the minds of the children in private life, afterwards issue forth to the world and become its public opinion; for nations are gathered out of nurseries and those who hold the leading strings of children, it may be, exercise even a greater power than those who hold the reins of government." "He who helps a child helps humanity with a distinctness, with an immediateness which no other help given in any other stage of their human life can possibly give." Aside from what the kindergarten does for the development of the children of all classes, it is a most effective social quarantine and an avenue through which we, as temperance workers, may gain an entrance to the homes and hearts of the parents who could be reached and influenced for temperance in no other way. The first district W. C. T. U. of Illinois, centered in Chicago, has for twelve years supported a kindergarten. From this has grown a flourishing church and Sunday-school and a changed neighborhood. The women of the first district agree that no line of work ever attempted has been more satisfactory or brought better results. The special effort this year will be along the lines of organizing classes or clubs for child study and the Froebelian philosophy and the introducing in kindergarten colleges and training schools lectures on scientific temperance instruction.

MEDAL CONTEST.

MRS. A. E. CARMAN: State superintendents report that the women realize more and more that as "benefit entertainments," these contests are unexcelled. Fourteen states report contests at state conventions, net receipts ranged from $60 to $116. The amount realized from all contests during the year is $9,114, and it is safe to say that one-fifth have not reported receipts. Number of contests held 2,132. Classes have averaged six contestants. This means 12,792 speakers. Counting an attendance of 300 to each contest, there have been 639,600 persons who have listened to these temperance truths. Eight diamond medal contests have been held, viz.: Illinois, three; Minnesota, one; Iowa, two; Virginia, one; Wisconsin, one. More gold and grand gold contests than last year. Missouri held an organizers' contest at its state convention, receipts $99. The department banner has been won by Missouri white-ribboners. They have held one contest to every ten members—304 in all. Mrs. Eva Munson Smith, of Springfield, Ill., has won the prize for holding the greatest number of contests, also the prize for holding the most contests in any county—twenty-six in all. Every state shows an increase over last year. In reply to the question sent out by the National corresponding secretary, what department of work has been most helpful to local unions, fourteen replied medal contests. To educate, agitate and at the same time make money, are not often in direct conjunction as possibilities, but in this department they are, and medal contest work has set many a union upon its feet, financially, and made it possible for it to go on its way rejoicing.

The following resolution was offered by Mrs. Emilie D. Martin, and adopted:

Resolved, That June 10, the birthday of William Jennings Demorest, be set apart as a memorial medal contest day in memory of Mr. and Mrs. Demorest (the originators of prohibition medal contests), and that on this day medal contests be held by unions and that from the funds received therefrom, two dollars be sent to the National treasurer.

At this point an enormous bouquet of magnificent chrysanthemums was brought to the platform for the General Officers. It proved to be the gift of the reporters. Mrs. Stevens thanked them warmly. "I hope," she concluded, "that the givers will be able to say better and better things of white-ribboners as the days go by. And she—our dear Miss Willard—thought so much of the reporters. I am going to place this beautiful token of their friendliness upon her chair."

Following this pleasant break in the routine of business came the report of the department of

SCHOOL SAVINGS BANKS.

MRS. S. L. OBERHOLTZER: The simple School Savings Banks system, which we advocate and which is embraced in this department of the W. C. T. U., appeals to all classes and to people of every tongue. In so far as we have statistics of the school savings in the United States, which embrace thirty-seven schools that took up the work before 1890 and 321 since that date, 41,863 scholars of those 349 schools have deposited to their personal credit $530,319.58. The withdrawals of money, which embrace that of many boys and girls who have finished public school courses and now hold their accounts as direct depositors with the bank, have been $350 668.56, leaving, at the close of the fiscal year, March 16, 1898, $179,651.02 to the credit of 41,863 pupils. These School Savings Banks, of which we have numerical record, are in institutions of seventy cities and villages and under the supervision of 1,809 teachers, the greater number of them being in Pennsylvania, New York and New Jersey being next in line. Your superintendent has sent out, through various sources, 100,000 pages of the School Savings Banks literature in the year, received 430 letters on the subject and written 702, made twenty public addresses for the cause, written a paper for the Mothers' Congress in Dallas, Texas (read by Mrs. Kirtland); had published 15 newspaper articles and numerous notes on the subject. Our list of state superintendents is yet incomplete, but there has been work done in states and territories where the department has not been officially taken up by the W. C. T. U. members, and we press on together, knowing the door of every school house is open to us, and that the methods of practical thrift-teaching will gladden and interest every section and district to which it is taken.

It was announced here by the National superintendent of work among miners that the second prize of that department had been won by Pennsylvania. So, while the Pennsylvania delegation stood, Mrs. Chambers received the banner from Mrs. Hoffman, who passed it over on behalf of Missouri, which state had held it the past year.

Rev. F. M. Rule, presiding elder of the M. E. church, was introduced and made a brief address.

The resolution offered by Mrs. Dunham pledging the W. C. T. U. to help pay off the Temple Trust Bonds was then taken up.

It was moved that the same rules in regard to applause and limit of time for speakers which prevailed yesterday be adopted for to-day. Carried.

MRS. WHITE-KINNEY asked that the resolution indorsing the Temple at the Boston Convention be read.

MRS. HOFFMAN: There was no indorsement given at all, except in the post-executive committee.

MRS. CARSE stated that it was her impression that the resolution came up before the Convention, and the matter was ordered to be looked up.

MRS. WHITE-KINNEY, of Oregon, asked when and where the responsibility of the union to the bondholders had been "acknowledged again and again," as stated in the resolution.

MRS. DUNHAM: I do not think it has been acknowledged by formal resolution since that time, but time and again from the platform by the National president; time and again in discussion on the Temple from the floor and in different ways has this moral obligation been spoken of and no protest made. It has been talked of in Convention as if it were a settled thing and to have gone through the formality of putting it on record would have been something that no one would have had any possible need of, it was so universally acknowledged.

MRS. WHITE-KINNEY: "We did not enter protest against this, because from the very beginning it was so universally believed, and so emphatically declared, that an affiliated interest did not lay a financial obligation upon us; therefore it was not necessary for us to rise every time some individual would happen to say something about moral obligations. In Miss Willard's last address she made the point that an affiliated interest had been explained so many times that no person of average intelligence would ever imagine that it laid an obligation upon us. I was present at the Boston Convention; I aver here that it never once entered my head that anything pertaining to that Temple was binding upon us for the financial obligations, moral or legal; and I again assert that there could be no difference between a legal and a moral obligation so far as being binding upon Christian women is concerned.

MRS. STEVENSON: I hold in my hand the minutes of the Boston Convention, November 13, 1891. I find on page 74 the minutes of the Post-executive committee of November 19; this resolution was offered by Mrs. Fessenden: "I move that a committee consisting of Mrs. Dunham, Mrs. Woodbridge and Mrs. Lathrap be appointed to carefully investigate the Temple interests, to report to the General Officers and each state president not later than four weeks from this date; also that we pledge ourselves to use our influence and power to sell the Temple bonds that have been issued by Mrs. Carse." There is no resolution indorsing the issue of the Temple bonds in the resolution of the Boston Convention.

MRS. CARSE: We do not claim that before the bonds were issued they were indorsed by this Convention, but this resolution was passed after they were issued, "pledging ourselves to use our influence," etc. Then on page 45, National Minutes of 1891, in Miss Willard's annual address the same year she said: "It is to be hoped that our white-ribboners who are looking for a good and safe investment will become purchasers of these Temple Trust bonds," and on the strength of that thousands flocked in and bought those bonds; on the strength of this, that we stand behind them morally, and we are morally obligated to pay these bonds; we did stand behind the bonds, we did recommend them, and every year since you have passed resolutions to help pay the bonds, and Miss Willard dedicated her fifty-ninth year at the last Convention to pay off these bonds; if there was nothing else but that, you are bound to pay the bonds.

MRS. GROUT, of Illinois, said: It seems to me a very curious thing that an organization which is so separate from us that it can go on and do business independent from us and withdraw from us without asking our consent, should hold us morally responsible for anything it does. It is also a curious process of reasoning that the bondholders should be so pitied when they have the stock as security for those bonds, and that it should be insisted that we should be fortunate to secure that stock ourselves. Why is the stock good in one case and bad in the other?

MRS. WALKER, of Nebraska, read from the W. C. T. U. annual leaflet, page 14, defining affiliated interests, and then said: I would like to place Nebraska on record as in favor of paying the Temple Trust bonds, not making any discrimination between needy or other bondholders, paying what we honestly owe.

MRS. BANCROFT, of Rhode Island: If there was a moral responsibility on the part of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to pay the $300,000 Temple Trust bonds, has not that responsibility been discharged in the amount contributed by the W. C. T. U. for the Temple enterprise, amounting to $250,000?

THE PRESIDENT: You have just now heard from a bondholder, and I do not believe she would be counted among the capitalists who hold the bonds.

MRS. BOURNE, of N. J., said: Year after year, when the report of the Temple has been presented and the motion to adopt has been made, the question has been asked: "Will this bind the convention to the action of the Temple Trustees?" and year after year the question has been answered in the words of our by-laws: "No state union shall be bound by any principle espoused or plan devised by the National W. C. T. U., except that all auxiliaries must subscribe to the total abstinence pledge and the constitution." It was only with that understanding that the reports from year to year of this affiliated interest have been adopted.

A member asked why the advertisement of the Temple was allowed to remain in THE UNION SIGNAL. Mrs. Stevenson explained that the W. T. P. A. was an affiliated interest, and the W. C. T. U. had no control over the advertisements.

A member asked a question in regard to the sending out of the letter by the executive committee.

MRS. HOFFMAN: The reason why the officers sent out that statement and recommended that local unions should not pay any more money was because they felt that they were in honor bound to let the women know exactly where we stood on that question; that we were actually dishonest if we allowed the women longer to pour money into that bottomless well without knowing exactly what they are doing. In regard to resolutions passed at other conventions I want to say that nothing else is binding on this convention but our constitution and our by-laws; no resolution binds us. Then I want to say another thing. To desperate straits are people driven when, in open convention, with regular order and after interminable debate a question is called and the yeas and nays are taken—to desperate extremities are people driven when they bring in again the same question to thresh over the same grain, and it is a repetition of the same effort to mislead the women of this convention and the women of this country.

Dr. Kane, of Philadelphia, asked whether the non-payment of the bonds would ruin Mrs. Carse, as she had issued them in her own name and on her own responsibility.

The Chair ruled that that was too personal a question to bring in.

MISS MARIE C. BREHM, of Illinois, said: So far as I can see, we are morally responsible for that debt because Mrs. Carse was allowed to sell the bonds with the consent of the W. C. T. U. We endorsed the affair year after year in some form or another, and the people at large who invested their money believed that we were a responsible organization of Christian women back of it.

MRS. SMITH, of Washington, D. C., thought the moral obligation had been discharged by the money that had already been raised by the W. C. T. U. if there ever had been any obligation. She then said: At the Convention in Chicago the question was asked of Mrs. Carse, "Is not the W. C. T. U. responsible for this building, supposing something should happen to it, or it be destroyed?" and she said, "Not at all." Then Mrs. Hobbs said, "Who is?" and she replied, "Matilda B. Carse."

MRS. GORDON, of Illinois, referred to the fact that the National leaflet stated that the affiliated interests were moral obligations, and the matter was referred to Mrs. Stevenson for explanation.

MRS. STEVENSON read the portion referred to from the leaflet and said: As I understand that question, it means that our relationship of cordial good-will and mutual helpfulness to the three affiliated interests extends to the nature of the work that they do. For instance, if in the Woman's Temperance Hospital they administer alcoholic medicines, that fact would be sufficient to sever the moral tie binding us to that hospital; if the W. T. P. A. should put into THE UNION SIGNAL articles upholding the moderate use of intoxicants, I should say that would sever the moral tie binding us to the W. T. P. A. We stood by the Temple as an affiliated interest when the plan was first proposed to give headquarters to the National W. C. T. U., and a revenue, but we did not stand by its debts, and we cannot be said to repudiate an obligation that never was ours.

MRS. CHAMBERS, of Pennsylvania, said that Miss Willard had asked her one year ago at Buffalo to be a Temple trustee and had said at that time: "We will help this year only; we will try what we can do for Tillie and the Temple, but I will only ask you to stand by and help one more year." Mrs. Chambers again read from the bond, and stated that the obligation rested with Mrs. Carse. At the request of Mrs. Carse, Mrs. Chambers read the whole paragraph.

MRS. BEAUCHAMP read an opinion written by Thomas W. and Lewis P. Shackelford, of West Superior, that the face of the bond shows that it is not issued by anybody representing the W. C. T. U. The corporal seal of the W. C. T. U. is not affixed to the bond, and that it is in no way the act of the W. C. T. U., and that the W. C. T. U. is in nowise responsible for them.

MRS. GRAHAM: I can never, while my memory lasts, forget Miss Willard when she stood forth that day in Buffalo and said: "While we have no legal obligation, we have a moral obligation," and I think the W. C. T. U. ought to stand higher than any financial organization.

Mrs. Helen M. Barker confirmed what Mrs. Smith, of Washington had said, and stated that Mrs. Carse had over and over again assured the voters of the National Convention that no responsibility whatever rested upon the National body, and that she, herself, stood wholly responsible.

In response to a question asked by Mrs. Campbell as to the moral obligation, MRS. BARKER said: Miss Willard said to me but a little while before she went to New York, and after she had gone to the rich men, "I have never promised to pay that $300,000; I have just promised to do what I could this year, and I am going to do it; and I am not going to the women, the unions have done enough, they ought not to be asked for another dollar." She also promised that Mrs. Carse should take her column out of THE UNION SIGNAL, and she sent Mrs. Horning, as press superintendent, to Mrs. Carse, asking her to take her column out, but Mrs. Carse refused to do it. Miss Willard said to twenty people in Chicago, and she asked one woman, Mrs. Caroline F. Grow, to record it, that never after this Convention should an effort be made to pay those bonds any further, and she said, "What bonds we are not able to pay with the money we have acquired by the next Convention, the women must take their stock for, and the unions must be released from this awful burden that has been upon us for the last ten years."

MRS. GROUT asked: If we become the possessors of this stock by buying these bonds, will we not then become legally responsible for the debts of this corporation in proportion to the amount of stock we own?

MRS. STEVENSON: Certainly, the same as in any other stock company.

MRS. WOODWARD suggested that questions be referred to the president and secretary of the Temple Trustees, who are familiar with these things, and give them an opportunity to reply.

MRS. CRANMER, of South Dakota: We may vote down our moral obligations in this matter, but the world at large will not vote down our moral obligation.

MISS PENMAN, of Iowa, said: We in the unions have stood by the Temple and we are willing to bear the burden. Our own women have not yet paid ten cents apiece yearly for the Temple; is not this a cause for serious reflection to those who cry that the unions are being impoverished for the Temple?

MRS. DUNHAM stated that the reason she had brought this matter up again was that she had received three notes from different people, asking her to bring it up, as they desired to change their vote. In reply to Mrs. White-Kinney, she stated that the National Union had allowed the idea that the moral obligation for these bonds rested on the union to go out and had never corrected it. The resolution adopted at the Convention last year was that you would work this year. How did you work? By stopping the whole enterprise by the middle of July, and had you not done that the trustees would never have come to you asking for your coöperation in this matter.

MRS. VOORHIES, of Michigan, quoted Miss Willard as saying at Buffalo: "Remember that this obligation rests, not upon you, but upon Mrs. Carse, and I do not say that we shall rise to owning the Temple, but, for myself, I intend to help pay up that debt."

MISS ANNA GORDON stated that Miss Willard has often said and written, "I consider that at the end of this year we must not go on, whether we have succeeded or not, in trying to raise money for the Temple." I think that the moral responsibility of the W. C. T. U., were that to be acknowledged, has been discharged. I believe that, while we have made a mistake, we ought not to go on with it. We have earnestly, honestly, prayerfully, faithfully tried to raise the money for those bonds; we have not succeeded; now let us say we are sorry; let us say we will use our $20,000, if we can get permission of the donors, and I feel sure we can, to pay off the most needy ones; and I hope dear Mrs. Carse will use her funds to pay off the balance of the needy bondholders. Then, dear friends, let us not vote aye upon that resolution and acknowledge that we have any responsibility, simply acknowledge that we have done the best we could. Let us stand by our vote of yesterday.

MRS. WOODWARD quoted Miss Willard's words: "We are in debt, not legally but morally, to the bondholders;" and went on to say that the W. C. T. U. was not a bankrupt concern, and could not plead inability to pay the bonds.

REV. ANNA SHAW denied that there ever had been any moral responsibility, but even had there been, it had been discharged by eleven years of toil and struggle, anxiety, sorrow, and misrepresentation. "The Temple interferes with the business of our Convention; it turns us aside from our regular course; it fills the press with the thought that we have one purpose, and that an agitation and fight over the Temperance Temple. To spend our time year after year in this way is not worthy of us; let us now take hold of the temperance work and carry that on. It is said that the souls that might be saved in Willard Hall might be lost; but Chicago has not the monopoly on drunkards; we have got them all over the United States, and we need to be using our money all over the United States to save these men as well as in Chicago."

MISS DOW stated that as all these points had been gone over yesterday, she would now move the previous question. Seconded.

Mrs. Carse asked that she might have the last word, and consent was given that she speak.

MRS. CARSE: It has been said that I have said that I alone was responsible. I think the lady who said that is mistaken.

Mrs. Smith arose and held up her hand, saying, "As I am an honest woman, I heard you say it."

MRS. CARSE: I said that the National W. C. T. U. was not legally responsible, and when I said that I meant that the W. C. T. U. had no money in the treasury to pay for those bonds, and we would have to raise it throughout the country.

Mrs. Carse then stated that an average of only fourteen cents per member had been contributed to the Temple in the eleven years, and said that the Temple Trustees would go on raising money just the same, and that she would never come to another Convention until the Temple was paid for.

The resolution of Mrs. Dunham was read again, a rising vote was taken, and the resolution was declared lost by a vote of 267 against to 76 for.

Mrs. Carse was then allowed unlimited time in which to speak. She reviewed the situation and reiterated her intention not to give up the effort to purchase the Temple. She said:

"When the work is completed the income derived from the Temple will go towards carrying forward the work Miss Willard labored to establish. All moneys received up to January 1, 1899, for the Temple will be credited to the National W. C. T. U., and when the building is paid for it will receive the pro rata promised from the net income from rentals. So will all states that have sent money to the building. All moneys received after January 1, 1899, will be credited to the Willard Memorial Fund, and when the building is paid for the net income from this part of the purchase money of the Temple will be disbursed by the Temple Trustees to the different departments of temperance work, which, in their opinions, are the most important."

It being stated that Mrs. Morrow, president of West Virginia, was ill, the delegation from that state was commissioned to convey to her a message of love and sympathy. A similar message was sent to Mrs. Dorsey, president of Arkansas, and a message of greeting to the Rev. Chauncey Hobart, husband of the late president emeritus of Minnesota.

Reports of superintendents were then resumed.

ANTI-NARCOTICS.

MRS. E. B. INGALLS: This department has worked very faithfully the past year to secure an interstate commerce law. As our laws now stand, no state can forbid the importation of cigarets. Mr. Terry, of Alabama, introduced, in the last Congress, a bill covering this point, and petitions were sent to senators and legislators from every state and territory in the United States. More petitions were sent to Congress for this bill than for any reform measure, and more came from my state, Missouri, than from any other state. The bill was referred to a committee, of which George W. Ray, of New York, was chairman, and there it was held, Mr. Ray being opposed to the wording of the bill. This gentleman has promised to introduce a bill at the next session of Congress that will be agreeable to him, and we will again petition, write, and work for this bill. It is to be hoped the measure is fully understood by our women. It does not ask Congress to pass an anti-cigaret law, only to so regulate the interstate commerce laws that states may govern the cigaret trade. Every effort is being made to teach children to use tobacco. A chewing gum is manufactured and given away called gumbacco. This contains fine cut tobacco. The best work done in this department the past year has been against tobacco, but other drugs have not been neglected. The drug habit is gradually on the increase; cocaine, chloral and opium in its many forms have a deep hold upon the American people, and our organization is fighting these drugs. Women, oh, so many women, even Christian temperance women, use headache medicine, soothing syrup, balsam, Perry Davis pain killer, and like drugs. These contain opium. The lecturers of this department have done a vast amount of good. State presidents, National and state lecturers, have aided wonderfully. Every lecturer ought to make the drug and tobacco habit a strong point in every lecture, because both lead to drink, and both are a very great evil apart from the drink habit. A novel plan adopted by one of the district superintendents in Ohio, was to nail boards to fences, trees, and other objects, and have painted thereon mottoes against tobacco. This is worth trying.

THE PRESS.

MRS. MINNIE B. HORNING: Quality, rather than quantity, seems to be the keynote from the state superintendents' reports this year. The department took for its motto, early in the year, "better three lines accepted than a column rejected," and often the three lines will see the light when the column will only see the waste paper basket. Probably no year in the history of the organization has the W. C. T. U. had greater prominence in the papers of the country. Pre-eminently have the columns been crowded with the going away of our dear Chieftain and the memorial services connected with her death. While the war shut out our material of one kind it opened the press of the country to our work in another form. Our protests against the canteen system went everywhere, and our work for the soldiers and sailors was widely published. Other matters bringing us nationally before the public were "Liquor in the new Congressional Library," "Launching of Battleships," "College Drinking," "Curfew Laws," "The Temple" and "The Hospital." The National superintendent has edited the W. C. T. U. News column in THE UNION SIGNAL all the year; has had charge of the state work in Illinois; addressed several district and local meetings, aside from the regular routine work of the department, which consists in keeping the secular, religious and philanthropic press in touch with our work. An advance has been made along all old lines, and some new ones satisfactorily entered upon. No department can miss the aid and inspiration of Miss Willard so much as the press department. She was its life, and the work all centered about her, her doings and her sayings. It has been hard to go on throughout the year without her constant help and suggestions. The good work done in the states, however, shows that the monument given her by the press department will be "more work, better done," than which none could have pleased her better.

After announcements by the secretary the Convention was dismissed by Miss Vincent, of Australia.

TUESDAY EVENING.

Mrs. Stevens in the chair.

The meeting opened with a selection by the male quartet. Devotional services were conducted by Mrs. B. Sturtevant Peet, president of Southern California. Miss Cummins led in prayer, after which the quartet sang again.

THE PRESIDENT: I am glad to announce that the invitation sent by this Convention to the soldiers of the Fourteenth Minnesota regiment, has by a goodly number been accepted, and they are with us here to-night, and (turning to them) on behalf of our great society I cordially welcome you, and I hope that you will enjoy being with us, as much as we enjoy having you here.

The soldiers, who were seated in the gallery on either side of the platform, were greeted with clapping of hands and waving of handkerchiefs, to which they responded in like manner.

MISS BELLE KEARNEY, of Mississippi, was then introduced to the audience as the first speaker of the evening, and said: I welcome the soldiers with all my heart. I have been thinking how very sweet and blessed it is to realize that there is no such thing now as the Mason and Dixon line. (Applause from the soldiers.) How very happy we have been in the South to have our boys marching right straight along side by side with these young men from throughout the north, the east and the west, and I can assure you that they have put on the blue uniform with just as much pride and have felt just as highly honored in wearing it in this magnificent war for the protection of those Cuban patriots, as the men from this section of the country could possibly have felt in putting it on. (Applause.)

Miss Willard did more than ten thousand men to effect this unity. She came to us twenty-four years ago, when it was thought a very dreadful thing for a woman to appear in public and when we were feeling very sore, and in her sweet, blessed Christlike way she joined our hands with your hands, and we are standing shoulder to shoulder in this magnificent fight we have undertaken for the protection of the home, the most magnificent fight that was ever undertaken in this nation or any other.

The speaker then related several stories illustrating the terrible effect upon the human body of drink and other forms of dissipation, and made a strong appeal to young men for right living.

A solo was rendered by Mrs. Jerrold Smith, a member of the North Dakota delegation.

MRS. LOUISE S. ROUNDS, of Chicago: Madam President, Comrades in the Holy War; Soldiers to the right of me and Soldiers to the left of me, comrades in another Holy War, I am glad to stand in your presence to-night to say a few words which I hope may be of profit.

The cause which brings us together is a holy cause. Remembering that the principle of total abstinence underlies the great work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, we would indeed be recreant to our trust if we were not to emphasize this great principle.

I looked into the face once upon a time of a young man who said to me, "I must have the drink," and in the impetuosity of my disposition I said to him, "There is no must about it; why don't you put it in other words, 'I want the drink and I will have it?'" And, looking up into my face in the most pitiful way, he said, "Do you know what the word appetite means; do you know what it means to want something that is your curse when you get it?" and I said "No, I do not know anything about that." "Well, that is exactly my trouble," he replied, "and if there was a pile of burning coals out here and liquor yonder, and I could not get it unless I walked with bare feet over those burning coals, I would do that for the drink." If there is one solitary individual in this house that knows what that kind of appetite means, that man (I do not want to say that woman) knows that he is in bondage and in slavery and in a condition that is both horrible and pitiful.

In one of the penitentiaries in the southern part of my state I spoke one Sabbath morning to the prisoners in the chapel, and while I was eating dinner in the warden's house the chaplain came to me and said, "There is one of the convicts who wants to speak with you," and after dinner I went into the guard room and saw him sitting there, and I sat down beside the poor fellow. He said to me, "Madam, you talked to us boys this morning and some of them cried, but I did not. I said, 'That woman don't know what she is talking about,'" and then he went on to tell me his story, and it was briefly this: "When I was five years old my father died. He was a drunkard. My mother married again; married another drunkard." (And then I made no comment.) "Father used to beat my mother and made her cry; after my mother married again my stepfather beat not only my mother, but he beat me, and when I was twelve years of age I could bear it no longer, and I threw my bundle out of the window one night and went out into the big world. I am thirty-two years of age and I have been in the penitentiary three times. I never heard a prayer until I heard it in the penitentiary; I never heard a word of the Bible read until I heard it read in the penitentiary; I never was in a church in my life; I was never in a Sabbath-school, and I want to ask you, with such a beginning, in the absence of all training and teaching, what else could I be but a criminal?" And I could not answer the man. Then I thought of all the saloons that there are in the United States protected by the law, whose work it is to make just such criminals as that man, and I pass that question on down through all grades of society and on up through all grades of society, and I ask every single official in the United States who sits in the halls of legislation, who sits in the White House at Washington, "What have we to do as we look out over this great nation; what have we to say to the drunkards that are about our streets?"

When I go back to my own state some man who votes the whisky ticket will look into my face and say, "What has your Prohibition party ever done?" And then I will look at him and say, "What has your party ever done? I do not care what its name—what has your party ever done to make it easy for the poor drunkard to get away from his cups?" I will say: "If you are afraid to grapple with it, just step right down and let us women take your place," for I am certain that I speak the truth to-night that there is not a woman in this house that is afraid of the whole combined power of the whisky business.

I want to say a word on woman suffrage. I am so glad that since I came to this Convention that South Dakota has spoken along that line. I find two lines and a half in the Chicago Tribune of yesterday, in which it said the vote was very light, and a few Scandinavians way up in the northern part of the state for some unaccountable reason voted for woman suffrage. God bless the Scandinavians! If the Scandinavians in South Dakota know better what is for the interest of American women than our own American men do, then God bless the Scandinavians and send them over here by shiploads. We want more of them. We want our hills and our valleys to bloom and blossom with the principles that they, it seems, have carried to the polls in South Dakota.

Why is the liquor traffic so afraid of women? Not the club women, or society women, not the women who make impossible doughnuts and destroy men's digestions at church suppers—not those women, but the women who wear this little white badge. They are afraid of us; they do not like us. In my state a dear white-ribboner died a few weeks ago—a dear old saint she was—and when they carried her to her burial, two saloonkeepers stood across the way and watched the little procession and one of them called out to the other, "That is right, get them all under the ground as fast as you can, for when they are all dead, then we will have more peace." I reply, they will never be dead. White-ribboners never die. They are only promoted. The liquor traffic is afraid of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union because ingrained into the very heart and core of our organization is that uncompromising spirit, that when we get the ballot—and we are going to get it—we will bury it.

Rev. Anna Shaw made the collection speech of the evening. Of her it was said by another delegate, "When Anna Shaw makes a collection speech the money just aches to get out of one's pocket." After the appeal for money she said:

When I look into the faces of these soldiers and realize what they have done and what they have borne for us, how they were ready to stand between their country and that which they believed to be a menace, and when I think of the willingness of the women of this country to come to their relief, to care for the sick and suffering soldiers in the tents and in the hospitals and in the field, I believe that these magnificent young men who have been so brave and so true on their country's battlefield against a foreign foe, will be our strong right helpers in this great war against a domestic foe. We must have the help of the men to overturn this liquor traffic.

I claim that the most cowardly thing that any government ever did in this world was to tie the hands of its women, as the women of the United States have their hands tied to-day, and then under the protection of the flag to put into the midst of the communities where we live, where our children are born and reared, a business protected by the laws of this government which cannot prosper, which cannot exist, save as the saloon is able to reach across the threshold of our homes and lay its hands upon the children of these homes and degrade and utterly ruin them, and then tell the women it is their business to remain at home, to rear families, to take care of children to give them to their nation in order to maintain their nation's saloons.

The men in Cuba need help, they need sympathy, but the children in the United States need protection and help as well as the men and women and children of foreign states, and more children have died in these days since our war began as the result of the accursed traffic in strong drink, than died in Cuba. In the home debased child life, in the home weakened child life, enfeebled child life, exposed child life, as the result of the legalized liquor traffic, and then, friends, to ask the women of this country to sit quietly with their hands tied and cry and pray about it!

Mrs. Rounds spoke of the young man who said his father beat his mother and she cried; his stepfather beat her and she cried. She was not a member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. No woman in the W. C. T. U. will stand up and be beaten by a drunken man and cry. She will go out and organize women to fight the business which makes her husband drunken, so that she need not cry. We have been promoted out of the crying period; we are not wiping our weeping eyes now; they are dry. We have stopped crying and gone to fighting, and I would rather have one woman to fight the liquor traffic than ten thousand women to sit down and cry about it. The time has come when the dignity of American citizenship has entered into our souls, and we demand the rights and prerogatives of American citizens, to be protected from every institution and from every business which interferes with our highest and best life in our homes. And therefore we claim, friends, that it is the duty of American men to join the army of the white-ribbon women in their purpose to rid this country of the saloon, and to untie the hands of womanhood that they may protect the interests of their homes, and the children in their homes. For this organization is a purely womanly organization, and doing a purely womanly business when it demands that the child life of this country shall be protected, and that children shall have a right to be born, a right to be reared amidst conditions which are of such a character as to guarantee that the child shall reach manhood without being dragged down and degraded to give a revenue to his country.

Mrs. Hays, of St. Paul, sang a solo, "I am far frae me hame," and responded to an encore.

MRS. CLARA C. HOFFMAN: You have heard something this evening about total abstinence, its necessity, the reasons for it; and, granting that argument, we come to the next position in logical sequence, that if we have total abstinence for the individual, we should have prohibition for the government. Coming down through the ages to our law, we find everywhere the principle of prohibition is recognized in law, and of necessity must be recognized in law. We find it everywhere for the protection of the weak against the strong, for the protection of the innocent against the guilty, for the protection of those that are good and desire to be good from those that are bad and have no desire to be good. Government of necessity must have its prohibitionary features, and everywhere we have them.

Attention was called to the soldiers that are in this audience, and I have sat here this evening looking at the flags that wreathe the gallery, and I thought of the soldiers during the Civil War, that after the hardships of the day, after the long marches, after the duties that followed so close and fast one upon the other, were found sleeping at their post, and what was the consequence? Sentenced to be shot. Prohibition against sleeping at one's post. Why? Because it acknowledged and recognized the danger that might come to the army lying in camp if the soldier was found sleeping at his post. And when we go on through the laws for the protection of society, we find that we have everywhere prohibition, prohibition, prohibition.

You walk into the cemetery to look at the resting place of the dust of those you loved, and you see everywhere a sign, "Do not touch the flowers," "Keep off the grass," there is a prohibition of that thing. Why? Is it criminal to walk on the grass? No. Is it wrong and a crime to pick flowers? No, but to protect and keep inviolate this sacred city of the dead these laws are made and prohibition is enacted. We do not find it necessary to make apology for the principle of prohibition. But we all know that it is quite common to make light of it; I know it is quite common for the ordinary paper to jeer a little about it, but, dear friends, it is not always that the battle is to the strong nor the race to the swift.

We have become a nation of municipal misrule; it matters not which party is in power. Take Chicago; Chicago is as typical a city as any city. It is sometimes under the Republican rule and sometimes under the Democratic rule, but it is always under the saloonatic rule. Always; there is never any change. That is the character of our government everywhere, and I do not want to malign them, but we need this principle of prohibition enforced for the sake of the weak, for the sake of the faltering, for the sake of the illy born.

I do not stand here to-night to arraign the liquor traffic you have made by your own free choice. The sovereign citizenship of this country has made the liquor traffic as lawful as the public school. It has made it as national as your national banks. Who are the sovereigns? They that wield the ballot. We are citizens all, but we are not sovereign citizens. A ballot is the only means by which the sovereign citizen registers his opinion on public questions. Now do not make a mistake and say, expresses his opinion. Bless your life, we can express opinions, but we can not register them. More's the pity. Many, many a man has registered when he never had an opinion.

I do not arraign the saloonkeeper; the saloonkeeper is as good as the saloon he keeps; and the saloon he keeps is as good as the local and municipal authorities that give him a license to keep it; and the local and municipal authorities that give him the license to keep the saloon are just as good as the law under which they act; and the law under which they act is just as good as the legislator that framed that law, and the legislator that framed that law is just as good as the Christian or non-Christian citizenship that elected that legislator to frame the law. The saloonkeeper is the creature of the system, and I do not arraign him. I arraign the citizenship of this nation for creating him.

Requests were made for the song, "Victory." Mrs. Graham responded to the delight of the audience.

The quartet gave another selection and responded to an encore after which the benediction was pronounced.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

Convention opened as always with a hymn, Scripture reading and prayer, Mrs. Rutherford, of Canada, leading in this brief service. Miss Willard's chair was beautiful with its crown of roses, hyacinths and ferns, and palms resting upon the arms—the work of the Southern states and superintendents.

The Convention then listened to the following department report:

SCHOOLS OF METHODS AND PARLIAMENTARY USAGE.

MRS. A. S. BENJAMIN: The states sending comparatively full reports are California, Southern California, Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, New York, North Dakota and Oregon. This holds true both of schools and of parliamentary usage. In Connecticut, schools were held in connection with Chautauqua and other assemblies, in district and county conventions and by local unions. In the latter there has been great gain in "methods" work, exceeding that of all former years combined. Indiana, as usual, held a series of county schools, embracing nearly her entire territory. Pennsylvania held at least one inter-county school, with good results, and several states gave a day in whole or in large part to school work in conventions, making parliamentary instruction one of the chief features. Michigan sends out "outlined topical studies," and Colorado prepares a quarterly outline of parliamentary study for the unions, and the sample enclosed was of the best. In North Dakota the department instruction was given by lectures, followed by discussion, and then by question and answer. In California a class in "civil rights" was one of the new features. I recommend that during the closing years of the present century our schools of methods pay special attention to first principles, impressing the pupils with the necessity of primary teaching, that our new unions may be so rooted and grounded as to run well the race that is set before them. Also, that diligent effort be made to make parliamentary teaching a part of the public school curriculum. Let every state superintendent, with her "aids," make this a prominent feature of her work during the year 1899, and then report progress.

On motion, the report of the resolutions committee was made the special order for three o'clock.

MRS. S. M. I. HENRY rose to a question of privilege:

"I want you to understand," she said, "what my relation is to the questions before us to-day, and what I would like to do. And I want to tell you before we separate here some things I do not want to do. I do not wish to bring any woman to look at anything from my standpoint, except she comes there just as I did, by the teaching of the word and the spirit of God. This is the sum total of what I would like the W. C. T. U. to discuss and adopt if there were more time to give to it at this Convention:

"Resolved, That since the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is composed of members representing every shade of religious belief, and even no avowed faith, that therefore, it is the sense of this Convention that nothing which marks any denominational differences has any legitimate place in the departments or plans of work in this organization.

"I am not going to ask you to act upon this, but simply wish to read this as a statement of principles. The enforcement of such a resolution would, of course, abolish Sabbath legislation of any description from the work of the W. C. T. U."

Then followed report of the National Temperance Hospital.

THE FRANCES E. WILLARD NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.

MRS. MARGARET INGLEHART, president of the board: Our hospital report differs this year in some essential points from that of any previous year since its inception. For three successive years we have had to report a debt, growing larger and more formidable, until last year it had grown to three thousand dollars. The beginning of the year looked dark and threatening. The hard times and other untoward circumstances had all combined toward this discouraging outlook. But the board worked steadily on until at our June meeting the treasurer reported all bills paid and the debt canceled in full.

As soon as the sad news of Miss Willard's death reached us the question arose of our hospital bearing her honored name. But for several months after financial embarrassment prevented any step being taken toward that end. In June, however, legal steps were taken by which the name became, "the Frances E. Willard National Temperance Hospital Association."

The call for five cents per member for special hospital use made by Miss Willard at Buffalo increased our treasury fund only about six hundred dollars. The "holiday sale" was another helper to the amount of $267.

The total receipts for the year were $9,865.41; disbursements, $9,861.10, leaving a balance in the treasury September 1, 1898, of $74.72. The two departments of the hospital have been managed most satisfactorily by their respective heads. Miss Gertrude H. Kellogg, superintendent of training school, has shown excellent executive ability in her department and is making a good record. The kind Christian bearing of our matron, Mrs. E. A. Millner, diffuses an atmosphere of gentleness and dignity over the entire household. Her careful management and wise economy have been of great value.

The hospital is located at 1619 Diversey avenue, in the same rented building which has been occupied the last six years. Last spring some necessary repairs were made, thus making our quarters more habitable for our needs, but still far from filling the requisites of an up-to-date hospital, such as is in demand at the present day. Two rooms have recently been converted into wards, thus making our capacity about thirty beds. This hospital has ever been and is steadily becoming more and more a recognized agency in creating among the better class of physicians the growing principle against the use of alcoholics in any form or for any purpose. It exists now as ever, wholly to demonstrate this principle, to educate physicians on this line and to train nurses in this most important truth.

As a part of this report Mrs. Hammond, of Ohio, read the following:

At the last National Convention in Buffalo, in 1897, a new connecting link was established between the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the National Temperance Hospital (since named "The Frances E. Willard National Temperance Hospital") by the choice, at the request of Miss Willard, of a standing committee of three, composed of Mrs. H. E. Hammond, Cleveland, Mrs. Mary Towne Burt, of New York, and Mrs. Marion Dunham, of Iowa, to act with Mrs. Margaret Inglehart, president of the hospital board.

By the vote of the executive board they sent out an appeal to the W. C. T. U. for a contribution of five cents per member for this enterprise, which means so much toward the final success of the temperance cause. The chairman sent this appeal to every state in the Union, and from nearly all favorable responses were received with about six hundred dollars in cash. We have visited and thoroughly inspected the hospital and its work and find it flourishing to that extent that they are cramped for room in which to care for their patients. A physician said, in our hearing, that the Temperance Hospital was the only one in Chicago filled to its utmost capacity.

Out of two hundred and thirty-eight patients treated during the past year there have been only twelve deaths, which is remarkable considering the critical cases received. They have a staff of able physicians and thirteen nurses. We heard the treasurer's report for October, and learned that eighteen states had reported that month, and the receipts from all sources for that month amounted to $1,017. During the past year among the beloved leaders of the W. C. T.

U. who have answered to the roll-call to come up higher is the name of Mary Towne Burt, a member of this committee that you appointed last year, and one who was devoted to the work of the hospital, and we, as a committee, can not better close our report to you than with the hearty endorsement of the proposition made by Mrs. Ella Boole, president of New York W. C. T. U., in her address to her state convention.

"Though loyal to all the departments of work there was none in which Mrs. Burt had a greater interest than in that of non-alcoholics in medicine and in the Temperance Hospital. The department was suggested by her mother, and the tender love she bore her mother, made her feel this department especially dear. I know of no better way we could honor the noble woman who led us so faithfully for sixteen years, and was an officer in our organization from the beginning, than to celebrate her birthday, March 28, as non-alcoholic and hospital day, by a public meeting in the advocacy of these principles, a collection to be taken, which shall be sent to the state treasurer through the county treasurer, which money shall be used to endow a free bed in the Temperance Hospital, which bed shall be known as the Mary Towne Burt Memorial Bed. The suggestion to hold for one year, when it can be renewed if desired. The entire cost of maintaining a free bed for one year would be $350."

Mrs. Milner, the matron of the hospital, was introduced, after which the report was adopted.

On motion, the nomination of Mrs. Boole as a member of the hospital board was ratified.

WORK AMONG RAILWAY MEN.

MRS. C. M. WOODWARD: The success with which work in this department is prosecuted is very marked. Alabama comes to the front, Mrs. Florence Forbes, superintendent, reporting a medal contest, netting $33 for the department. All contestants were railway men. Mrs. Allen, superintendent of Massachusetts, holds regular meetings with the Brotherhoods of Engineers, Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors. The engineers and conductors contributed $25 to the state fund for making the Temple Miss Willard's memorial. The General Officers and the National superintendent memorialized various railroad corporations to abolish sale of liquor upon dining-cars and in hotels. The National superintendent also filed a remonstrance, as provided by the laws of Nebraska, against the issuance of a license to the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition at Omaha, authorizing the sale of liquors. This remonstrance, "in consideration of the interests, physical and moral, of the railway men of this country, whose duties will be very laborious, continuous and exacting under the most favorable conditions. The sale and consequent use of intoxicants by visitors to the exposition will greatly increase the difficulty of the work of railroad men and the hazard pertaining to the same," was filed March 29, 1898. An order has been issued that conductors should not use tobacco by a leading railway system, and in the offices of railways may be found placards prohibiting smoking. The general manager of the Union Pacific Railroad has abolished the sale of liquor in hotels belonging to the system. The well known order that railway men shall not drink or frequent saloons, while on duty, is now being interpreted that they must abstain, as a railway man is always subject to "call," and is therefore always on duty. The attractive souvenir, distributed by Mrs. Woodward (which will be sent by her upon receipt of postage), said: "The ordinary reading-room lacks the social feature hard-worked men enjoy and need. It does not provide for the social and intellectual advancement of men and women unitedly. The 'Social Settlement,' with clubs and societies for study and relaxation, with the 'Inn' attached, is far more desirable."

Minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved. Report of executive committee read, and motion made to adopt.

THE PRESIDENT: The Chair wishes to call special attention to the first part of this report, with the recommendation that Miss Willard's heavenly birthday, February 17, should be observed by all the local unions, and that from each meeting there should be at least a sum amounting to two dollars sent to the National treasurer, which sum should be the Willard memorial fund for the purpose of the extension and propagation of the work to which she consecrated her life. And so in accepting this report, the Chair wants all the members of all local unions, the great rank and file upon whom we depend so much (for without them we could have no society of course), we want you in accepting this report to bear this in mind, as well as to have in mind the indorsement of the nomination of the executive committee for superintendents who are to lead in the great departments of work of our society.

A MEMBER: In accepting this report, do we pledge ourselves to pay this amount?

THE PRESIDENT: You do not. It is merely a recommendation.

MRS. DUNHAM: Will that appeal be sent to the local unions direct, or through the state officers?

THE PRESIDENT: That point will probably be considered in the executive committee to-morrow.

MRS. DUNHAM: I think that all requests to the local unions, no matter if they are called National, should go through the state officials thus making it optional with them.

THE PRESIDENT: That will be considered to-morrow in the post-executive, and, of course, we expect Mrs. Dunham and the presidents of other states to be there when it is discussed.

A MEMBER FROM ILLINOIS: I would like to know if this is in addition to the two dollars previously called for?

THE PRESIDENT: This takes its place. That is a thing of the past and this is something for the future. And it ought to be not only for this year, but for all the years to come, as long as we have to work.

The report was adopted.

The following telegram was then read:

To Mrs. Hoffman:

Tell Convention we thank them. Read Prov. 31:28. (Her children rise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her.)

(Signed) M. STEVENS.
GERTRUDE STEVENS LEAVITT.
WILLIAM LEAVITT, JR.

And this from Miss Gordon's mother:

Tender, loving greetings. Read Philemon 3 and 4. (Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers.) MARY E. GORDON.

The following telegrams were received from Seattle:

To Convention:

Citizens of Seattle guarantee $1,500 to be paid Marion Baxter for National treasury conditional on Convention meeting here next year.

(Signed) CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.
DAILY POST INTELLIGENCER (Rep.)

To Mrs. Stevens:

Seattle raised guarantee for the meeting of your organization Seattle next year. No city in America needs your presence more, and no city will more cordially greet members of your grand organization and aid in its proper entertainment than Seattle.

(Signed) ALDEN J. BLETHEN, Editor Times (Dem.)

Those sitting near the press tables had observed that for the last quarter of an hour or so a box of the most delectable candy had been passing round among the reporters, who seemed to be thoroughly appreciating the dainty confection, and that likewise a note which had accompanied the gift was being passed from hand to hand and read with evident pleasure. Mrs. Fry, rising to a question of privilege, read the contents of the note as follows:

You've given many sweets to us,
Brave comrades of the quill;
We'd like to pay you back again
In something sweeter still.

We cannot match your "honeyed words,"
We'd do it if we could,
But here are hopes and prayers and thanks,
And may we all be good!

It was signed "The General Officers," but the monogram, "A. A. G.," on the stationery told who the poet was, and, said one, "That's just like Anna Gordon." Miss Edna Bean, of the Chicago Record, was called upon to respond in behalf of the reporters, but she stated that she never made speeches, only tried to report them.

The president then introduced Mrs. Margaret B. Platt, of Washington, D. C., who was on her way to the state of Washington, which state is to be her home in the future, much to the regret of the District white-ribboners. Her son, Willie, a boy of fifteen, was also presented. Willie is an honorary member of the Y's, and showed his colors by wearing the Y pin. Many kind words were spoken of Mrs. Platt by Mrs. Stevens and others, referring to her readiness to respond to any call for W. C. T. U. work, while the Convention rose and handkerchiefs were waved in greeting and farewell.

Then came the always interesting report of the department of

SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE INSTRUCTION.

MRS. MARY H. HUNT: The civilized nations of the earth are putting cause and effect together on the alcohol question as never before. In France, Switzerland and Belgium the increasing use of alcohol is recognized as the cause of a physical decline in stature that is filling those nations with alarm for their future. Close investigation is proving to the Kaiser that the beer-drinking soldier has only about eighty per cent of the endurance of the total abstainer, and economists are calling attention to the bad effects that increasing drink habits are having upon German industries. The young Czar of Russia, alarmed at the inroads which he sees alcohol making upon his army and people, is striving to stem the tide. Thoughtful Englishmen are saying that Britain's greatest enemy is alcohol. In our own country its effects upon our soldiers, in home camps and on the field, have been made sadly evident to the American people. The truth against alcohol is out. Everything that its advocates can say in its favor is controverted by the strongest scientific authorities of the world, who pronounce it a poison—the genius of degeneracy. Nothing can hide this truth from the people and their children whose heritage it is. The per capita consumption of alcohol has begun to decline in this country, although its consumption is increasing in other nations. The New York Medical Record puts this decline during the last ten years at thirty per cent. Prior to that time there was a continual increase. During those years some of our prohibitory laws have been repealed, others have been weakened; less rather than more temperance platform work has been done, and more than 4,000,000 people have come to us from foreign lands, bringing with them the alcoholic habits of the old world. In the face of all these unfavorable conditions, why has the per capita consumption of alcohol in this country decreased during this time, while previously it increased? Our English friends are doing as much church, society and Band of Hope work as we, and perhaps more, yet England's drink bill for 1897 ran up to $16,500,000 more than that of the preceding year. The only new feature introduced into temperance work in this country during the past ten years so generally as to touch all sections, and the only method of importance in which our temperance work differs from that of England, is that of temperance education in the public schools. It is this which is getting the truth to the people so generally as already to bear fruit. It is this which is laying the foundation for the intelligent sobriety of the future American. We would not for a moment question the value of other temperance efforts which have helped to secure these results, but the figures show that such efforts without temperance education were inadequate to produce this decline. "Duty determines destiny," said President McKinley, in his Omaha speech. It is the legal duty of nearly all the school boards and teachers in this country to see that all pupils in all schools are taught the nature and effects of alcoholic drinks and other narcotics, together with other laws of health. The way in which that duty is performed during the next fifteen years will influence mightily the destiny of this nation. The God of nations is calling us so to educate our people that this calamity may be averted from those for whom we are newly responsible, as we at the same time save our own children.

Mrs. Hunt presented banners, one to Wisconsin, the state where the superintendent of scientific temperance instruction had secured the largest number of local members; another to New Jersey as the state which had secured the adoption of the largest number of the indorsed books during the past year. The banners were received by the presidents of the respective states

Miss Brehm called attention to the splendid work done in this department the past year among the Scandinavians of Minnesota by Mrs. Ulrikka F. Bruun, one of the associate superintendents of work among foreigners.

The report of the Sunday-school department was then presented.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

MRS. STELLA B. IRVINE: No year in the history of the department since your present superintendent has had the work in charge has been so fruitful along all lines of Sunday-school work. Sunday-school temperance work has been presented at a larger number of county and state Sunday-school conventions than ever before. At Chautauqua assemblies in various parts of the United States temperance teaching in the Sunday-school has been considered. Sunday-school workers in other countries are sending to us for our helps and suggestions. The missionary fields have had our careful attention in response to earnest appeals. A Sunday-school temperance catechism has been prepared by the permanent temperance committee of the Presbyterian church and an appeal made to the teachers to give the children careful Bible temperance teaching. Pastors, Sunday-school teachers and officers are, with few exceptions, signing the resolutions favoring the quarterly temperance lessons. A large petition will be sent to the International Sunday-school Convention that meets in Atlanta, April, 1899. The International Temperance Congress held at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, N. Y., adopted a strong resolution favoring the temperance work in the Sunday-schools and calling upon the International Lesson committee to retain the Quarterly Temperance Lesson. Forty-five superintendents were on record at the beginning of the year. Present enrollment, forty-one superintendents, thirty-five of whom have sent regular reports; 1,094,975 pages of literature have been distributed by the department; 3,850 temperance books have been placed in Sunday-school libraries. Total number of temperance books reported in libraries, 6,468; concerts, 2,214; Sunday-school temperance rallies, 514; mass-meetings, 1,187; temperance addresses given in Sunday-schools, 3,711; temperance secretaries secured, 653; co-workers, 24; 404 rolls of honor have been placed in Sunday-schools this year; 483 families have been pledged. Increase of pledged membership, 58,952; total pledged membership, 225,298. Appropriations reported, $135.95. Total amount expended by superintendents, $211.90.

The banner for Sunday-school work was presented by Mrs. Irvine to Mrs. Gillson of Missouri, who received it on behalf of Mrs. Sturtevant, state superintendent of that department.

On motion of Mrs. Benjamin the report of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association was made the special order for 12:05.

Then came the evangelistic service, during which Miss Greenwood replied to questions that had come to her as a result of the testimonies on the "Value of the Word." She alluded to the sweet spirit which had attended all the evangelistic meetings of this Convention, and the earnest consecration manifested. Mrs. Graham sang a beautiful solo, which served to intensify the deeply spiritual atmosphere of this service.

Mrs. Stevenson presented to the Convention Mr. Shay, of Ohio, a railroad engineer, who had put himself on record as a man who refused to run trains on Sunday. Mr. Shay said he was not going around the country making a show of himself, but he was glad to stand on the platform before such a gathering and express sympathy and coöperation with the grand purpose of the W. C. T. U.

The special order was then called for, viz., the report of the W. T. P. A. We regret that by reason of its length we are obliged to omit a large portion of this report.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE: To attempt to report any work now in which Frances E. Willard was a potent factor is to bring to mind so vividly her powerful personality that it makes all other matters subordinate. If I should attempt to-day to tell all she was to the W. T. P. A. it would take much more time than the program allows me for my report. As editor-in-chief of THE UNION SIGNAL, of late years she could not give the paper the attention she desired on account of her continued absence from the city, a fact which she greatly deplored. But she was always at work doing something to advance its interest. Through her powerful influence, she secured some of the best writers we have had for the paper. She herself wrote constantly for it and never charged for her services. She fully realized its importance as one of the greatest factors in advancing the temperance cause and holding our organization together.

The cash receipts of the Association from October 1, 1897, to October 1, 1898, were $136,180.43. The cash expenditures were $135,780.10. The year's business shows a net gain of $2,178.05. The receipts of the past year show an increase over the previous year, which is due largely to the royalty on the memorial volume, which has reached a sale of over 100,000 copies. No doubt three times as many would have been sold if it had not been for the distraction caused by the Spanish war. To October 1, 1898, about $19,000 was received from this source; $1,000 was set apart for incidental expenses connected with preparing manuscript, stenographic work, postage, clerical help, etc., leaving $18,000, one-half of which, according to contract, was the share of the publishing house. More than $5,000 of this money has been expended in reducing loans from various private individuals who had aided the Association in the days of financial stringency. The balance enabled us to pay for two fine presses for job work, ordered last year, a new standing press and electric motor and other valuable additions to our plant. Enlarging and perfecting the manufacturing plant must eventually bring increased revenue. It is universally conceded that the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association stands second to none in the quality of its printing, and the amount of orders is only limited by its financial resources. In the job department we have the same regular publications as last year, with the exception of The Electrical Trade, which has now its own printing establishment.

It is most gratifying to report that while publications show a falling off, there has been an increase in the receipts of the subscription department of THE UNION SIGNAL, many accounts which last year were in deficit having been settled, and in many instances renewals in advance have been sent as a thankoffering for consideration shown during the years of inability to pay.

There has been a decrease in the advertising department, owing to the sensitiveness of our patrons to the business combinations of the National W. C. T. U. with manufacturers of wool soap, Rumford baking powder, etc., although some revenue to THE UNION SIGNAL has come through advertising contracts from these firms.

Increased interest has been shown in The Young Crusader, and large clubs are sent in by special state agents of this little paper, which has a bright future as the official organ of the L. T. L.

Mrs. Clara C. Chapin, editor books and leaflets, reports that the marked feature of the book department the past year has been the bringing out of new editions of Miss Willard's works, in response to the increased interest throughout the organization and by the public in everything pertaining to our promoted leader. Also a little book, entitled, "A Life of Service," has just been reprinted. This is a collection of sketches of Miss Willard written by different friends who knew her well.

Our presses have turned out nearly 150,000,000 of printed pages—about 50,000,000 of this number being our own publications. There has been a decided increase in the demand for purity literature, and leaflets upon this subject, upon narcotics and upon Christian citizenship have had a wider circulation than upon any other of the many departments of work. Last year we issued a Convention Hymnal, which was compiled by Miss Marie Brehm from the White-Ribbon Hymnal, songs especially adapted to convention use being selected. To avoid injuring the sale of the larger hymnal, we furnished these only in large quantities for special occasions, but so numerous have been the inquiries for single copies, it has seemed wise to place them in the general market at fifteen cents each. We have endeavored also to encourage the bringing out special selections from our various music books, hoping thereby to introduce temperance songs, it being painfully evident that in the average temperance gathering, music is a secondary consideration. That the children sing is indicated by the steady demand for Marching Songs, which, however, is not as large this year as last.

The official etching, which is an exquisite work of art and is made from the favorite "Evangeline" picture, has been ordered largely for libraries, schools, colleges and many unions. The plate was made at great expense by Mr. Henry Taylor, Jr., and is executed in a highly artistic manner by this well-known etcher. The photograph was selected by the officers of the National W. C. T. U. for this purpose, and is an ideal portrait of our beloved leader.

Laying down her manuscript, Mrs. Carse paused and then continued: I have a little word to say to you this afternoon. Things have changed a little, and, as I told you yesterday, this is the last time that you will see me in Convention until I can return and say, "The Temple has been paid for," or else I may have passed into the mists of the beyond. But I trust still to be able to come back and tell you that, before anything of this kind comes to me. My hair may be white, but I hope to come back to you. I love the W. C. T. U. to-day, aye, even more than ever, and do not think, as some have thought, that I am going to leave you, I am not. I am still president of the Central union and I am going to be at the state conventions, but I have a work to do, friends, and I must give myself all to it. I have been president of the W. T. P. A. for almost nineteen years. It was established in 1880, and, as you remember, I was its founder and its mother. I have loved it as my eldest born child, and I love it still. I believe it is the right hand of the W. C. T. U., and it must be supported and sustained and you must stand by it. But I want to-day to say, that the election of the board of directors comes off on Friday in Chicago, and I shall then withdraw from the board and from the presidency of the association. I have some stock, I think it is about one thousand dollars, and I am going to present that to the association as a little gift of love. I still wish the privilege of voting it, but that is all.

In regard to my Temple column in THE UNION SIGNAL, that will be transferred to The Appeal, which we started two months ago in the interest of the Temple. It is now published in Nebraska, but is going to be removed to Chicago. I will have a little word of farewell to you, though, next week in THE UNION SIGNAL. I want to say that I love you all. I am sorry [her voice breaking] I could not hold myself better yesterday, but I was so tired; I was under such stress.

THE PRESIDENT: You did well yesterday.

MRS. CARSE: It is always hard to say farewell, you know, and I ask your forgiveness if I hurt any of your feelings in the heat of the debate.

THE PRESIDENT: I am sure the Convention will rise in recognition of these words by Mrs. Carse.

The Convention rose and gave Mrs. Carse the Chautauqua salute.

MRS. DUNHAM: I want to say that sometime, sisters, you will know Mrs. Matilda B. Carse for what she is, and sometime you will know the worth of her unselfish work these many years for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. I only hope you will find it out before she dies.

MRS. CARSE: I want to say another word. It was said here on the platform yesterday about that Temple column in THE UNION SIGNAL that I refused to give it up. I never heard from Miss Willard's lips that she wanted me to drop it. She told me that there were others, some of the officials, that wanted me to drop my column, but never did she say to me that she wanted me to drop it. I saw in the papers this morning, and it hurts my work—you know I have a great work to do, and I do not want anything to hurt it when I go out to people—the papers said that the Temple does not pay running expenses. Miss Gordon's words were construed to mean that. Marshall Field no doubt said that to Miss Gordon, for he said about the same to myself. He is the most pessimistic man in Chicago; you would think to hear him talk that all of Chicago was going into the hole. He always talks that way, though he rides on the crest of the wave himself. I want to say that if we did not have the interest to pay, and taxes, and salaries and everything of that kind, it would pay running expenses. We have been running behind for two or three years, but we are hoping to catch up. Another point. I want to thank the press. I do think they have been most kind and friendly. They have come here day after day and listened to the deliberations. Of course they did not understand all the ins and outs, but they have been very fair and very kind to me, and from my heart I thank them. But they said that yesterday when I turned to dear Mrs. Stevens and said "beloved," it was in sarcasm. It was not—I love her, and she is beloved. I have known her for many years. She is always ready to fill any position with such honesty and sincerity, and Anna Gordon spoke yesterday of her beautiful humility. Now we have put her in the highest place, and I do not think you can get two better leaders than these two dear women (stepping up beside Mrs. Stevens and Miss Gordon).

THE PRESIDENT: (laughingly) Now, wouldn't you like to have our pictures?

To her surprise a photographer came forward, and it transpired that he was there to take a picture of the National Officers. The Convention insisted that the three—Mrs. Stevens, Miss Gordon and Mrs. Carse—be taken first alone, and Mrs. Tevis, of Beverly, N. J., moved that the picture be sold for the benefit of the peace and arbitration department. (Laughter and great applause.) With many facetious remarks from platform and floor the picture was taken, also one of the General Officers.

MISS ANNA GORDON: We have just listened to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the president of the board of directors of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. We have heard with sincere regret of her resignation from that board. As a National organization we can not act upon that resignation, but I would like to move that this Convention unanimously invite Mrs. Carse to attend the next convention of our body, whether she has paid for the Temple or not. And I should like that by a rising vote we put on record our appreciation of all that Mrs. Carse has done to build up the publishing house, which is, as Miss Willard called it, the right arm of service, the arsenal of weapons for the W. C. T. U.

A rising vote was taken and Miss Gordon's motion was carried.

MRS. C. F. GROW, business manager of the W. T. P. A., then reported as follows: As I look back upon this most eventful year in the history of the W. T. P. A., so closely interwoven with the name of our beloved leader, there comes to mind the earnest purpose and unalterable determination which gave to us the revised edition of "Woman and Temperance" for the World's Convention at Toronto, and the National at Buffalo, and I ask myself, could she have known this was to be her last great work for the Publishing House which was her pride, and of which she was the inspiration, would she have had it otherwise? "Woman and Temperance"! for these she lived, for these she died, and her words and "her works do follow her."

When the great sorrow came and reverently we sent out the "Memorial number," we faced the stern reality that the pen of our editor-in-chief would never again thrill the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL with its matchless words of genius and inspiration. Thousands of copies of this issue have gone into mourning households from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast and to the far-off countries of the world, where she was as well beloved as in her native land. In point of typographical appearance and mechanical execution and in size of issue this has exceeded any copy of THE UNION SIGNAL yet published, and so continuous is the demand that the plates have not been returned to the foundry, as is usual with our regular issues.

Within a few months that sacred book, "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard," written by our Anna Gordon, had been placed in the hands of a reliable subscription book house, one member of the firm being a woman and another the son of a district W. C. T. U. president in an eastern state, whose wife wears the ribbon white. The Pacific coast representative of this company is also a white-ribboner. We have often been asked why the W. T. P. A. did not bring out this book in its own printing establishment? Its plant is too small and its facilities too limited to attempt so large an issue in so short a time. Three or four printing houses and as many binderies were employed for weeks in completing the work, and even then agents grew impatient of delay in delivery.

So universal has been the demand for "Glimpses," "Nineteen Beautiful Years," "Do Everything" and "A Great Mother," that new editions of all these have been run on our presses. A reprint of "A Life of Service" has been made, and "A White Life for Two," with corrections by Miss Gordon, will soon be for sale.

A beautiful souvenir pledge card was brought out for distribution by the Loyal Temperance Legion on Miss Willard's birthday. The delicate green tint, the appropriate design, the face of our beloved leader, the pledge on the back of the card in fac simile of her own handwriting, together with the fact that it was taken from Miss Gordon's autograph album, render this one of the most attractive pledge cards ever issued. It has already been sold in quantities as a choice Christmas card.

One of the most exquisite publications of the year issued from the job department is the Y Almanac compiled by Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, general secretary of the Young Woman's Branch of the World's W. C. T. U.

In '93 and '94 request having been made for new leaflets, a large number were issued, but in four years the first edition of 2,000 of each had not been exhausted.

In 1894 three new series, "Busy Day," "Little Folks," and "Picture" leaflets were printed and offered at 15 cents per hundred. The average run of these is 5,000, which at the thousand rate nets the publishing house $6.25 per year for entire amount.

In the department leaflets about 2,500 of each department are used in one year, which at 25 cents per hundred without discount brings a revenue of $6.25 per year. Mrs. La Fetra's leaflet under Christian Citizenship, "Why Should a Church Member Belong to the W. C. T. U?" is a remarkable exception, over 30,000 having been sent out the past year.

In conclusion Mrs. Grow alluded lovingly to Miss Addie Austin, who for many years had had charge of the W. T. P. A. literature at our National gathering and who had been ill, and at the same time bespoke the attention and patronage of the Convention for our Mrs. Lindhagen, faithful and true, who presided at the table in her stead.

MRS. FRY being called upon to make a report as editor of THE UNION SIGNAL stated that she had no report to make. She said: Some of you are concerned, I have learned by your questions, about THE UNION SIGNAL, but when I point you to the members of the board of management of the W. T. P. A., and refer you to Mrs. Bailey, Mrs. Barker, Mrs. Hoffman, Mrs. Rounds and numbers of others that I could mention, and then in the office, to our dear Mrs. Chapin, you will know that THE UNION SIGNAL will go on all right. You have been asking about the policy of THE UNION SIGNAL, and I can talk to you plainer now than I could the other day. All these women here know that THE UNION SIGNAL is the official organ of the World's and National W. C. T. U. Its policy is, to be your mouthpiece to speak the will and the work and the methods of the National. The editors express no private opinion in THE UNION SIGNAL; it is the opinion and policy of this organization which they are there to express, and I must not fail to tell you how they have been supported and helped this trying year by the National Officers at Headquarters.

Mrs. Clara C. Chapin, associate editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, was asked to come to the platform and be presented. She was pleased, she said, to stand there and let the Convention look at her, for she knew that was all they wanted at that time.

Two evangelists from Canada were presented by Mrs. Stevens; one, the Rev. Mr. Crosby, sang very effectively, "Only remembered by what I have done"; the other, the Rev. J. E. Hunter, pronounced the benediction.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

Devotional service, led by Mrs. Mary E. Kenney, president of South Carolina.

The following department reports were read:

PHYSICAL CULTURE.

MRS. FRANCES W. LEITER: The state superintendents of this department now number twenty-five. Reports show increasing interest and more efficient work. This subject is gradually finding place on the programs of state, district and county W. C. T. U. conventions, a portion including respite exercises each session. A number of the state superintendents have been in the field much of the time, conducting classes in physical training. A course always includes lectures upon health and correct dress. More heartily and successfully than ever before have the superintendents coöperated in the plans of the department. The distribution of pertinent literature upon the various phases of the question has been a persistent effort. The Responsive Reading on physical culture is proving valuable in meetings of local unions. The leaflet entitled, "Suggestions," is the assistance county and local superintendents need. This contains a list of the literature. Able specialists participated in a fine program under the physical education department of the National Educational Association, at Washington, last summer. In furthering the interests of correct dress, the department has secured one of the most valuable books yet written on the subject, of which Mrs. Frank Stuart Parker is author. Two states are preparing for legislative effort. We do not approve the introduction of

With the assistance of associates and superintendents, this important phase of education has been presented at schools of methods, Chautauquas, some national assemblies, and particularly organizations of women, state and national.

TEMPERANCE LITERATURE.

MISS HELEN L. HOOD: There are forty states having literature superintendents. Ten million pages of leaflets, papers, books have been circulated during the year. These figures do not include all that has been distributed, as few unions have kept a correct report of the amount sent out. The channels through which these have been circulated are various. Public meetings, circulating libraries, school rooms, Sunday-schools, depots, reading rooms, are some which may be mentioned. Many state superintendents report that the demand is increasing on the part of the public for literature; especially is this the case in small country places, where the people have been supplied with good reading matter by the W. C. T. U. Sailors' bethels, jails, prisons, almshouses have been well supplied. During the last summer several of our military camps were visited, and bright, attractive literature was left with the soldiers. Several of the states report the distribution of leaflets and Timely Talks, at local campaigns held, where much good resulted from the same. Two thousand superintendents in local unions are registered, and it is through so many of these faithful ones that we are able to record so much that has been accomplished. Early in the year I sent out a circular with suggestions for local workers. Good reports have come from many who used them. It is hoped that the unions will take up more generally the plan for topical study. The more we understand what the W. C. T. U. stands for and means, the better workers we shall become. The object of the department is twofold—to educate the worker; to educate the general public; and it will be the work of the future to increase these, and open many doors for more light to enter, which shall benefit the worker and the great outside public.

WORK AMONG COLORED PEOPLE.

MRS. LUCY THURMAN: This year is bringing more reports than ever before. I have received several from local unions saying, "Our states have not a department of work among colored people, but we want our report to go into the National." We have in all six state organizations among colored women, and look forward with a great deal of hope for the organization of every southern state in the next two or three years. My work for the year has extended into ten states—Texas, Louisiana, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, North Carolina, New Jersey, Indiana, Ohio and Michigan. I have attended three state meetings; have presented the work at one state teachers' association; have spoken to the teachers and children in thirty-six public schools, twenty-two colleges and state normal schools, and fifteen ministers' meetings. Seven full months have been given to field work. I have sent out during my stay at home this summer 1,000 typewritten letters to ministers and teachers asking their co-operation in this work; every moment of my time seems taxed to the very utmost, but I am never tired of this blessed work—only at times tired in it.

LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION.

MRS. HELEN G. RICE: After stating that she should make no attempt to give a report, but that she would mail her detailed report to any one desiring it, Mrs. Rice said: The object of the Loyal Temperance Legion is twofold: First, to make of our boys and girls intelligent total abstainers, who can give a reason for their principles and practice. So we teach them temperance truth, not only from the standpoint of science, but also of God's Word, of government, and of the social problems that confront us; second, to train our boys and girls to translate this truth into temperance work. The many unions that are maintaining Legions are building for the future, not only of our great white-ribbon army, but of the temperance cause. One of our prominent lecturers has found, in more than one instance, that of the new W. C. T. U. members she secured, more than half had been trained in the Legion. The many unions that are failing to carry on the L. T. L. work are missing a priceless opportunity, not only to influence the lives of the young people, but to give them the enthusiasm for temperance work which comes from the fact that they are linked with the world-wide L. T. L. army. Our hope, as Legion workers, for the victory for which we work and hope and pray, is in the men and women of to-morrow whom we are training as boys and girls to-day.

Mrs. Rice in conclusion, graphically described "The Good Ship Temperance," whose > . . . "masts of seasoned timber,

> Pointing upward strong and true,
> Are the Loyal Temperance Legion,
> And the W. C. T. U.
> Over all there floats a banner,
> 'God, and Home and Native Land,'
> And beneath, our Captain Stevens,
> With brave helpers, takes her stand."

The poem and the stirring manner in which it was rendered, created immense enthusiasm and in response to the continued applause Mrs. Rice gave the "yell" of the Massachusetts L. T. L.

MRS. STEVENS: I was going to say something very nice about that poem, but I cannot say it because she put me in.

(The poem may be found in the "Chalk-Talk Hand Book," published by the W. T. P. A.)

Then Mrs. Hoffman, "as a means of bringing the Convention down to earth," she said, read an announcement.

WORK AMONG FOREIGNERS.

MRS. S. F. GRUBB: Eight National associates, Swedish (two), German, Norwegian, Holland, Spanish, Chinese and missionary at port of New York, with twenty-eight state superintendents and myself, compose the corps of workers for this department. Over 250,000 pages of literature in eighteen languages have been distributed. Large donations have been made to other departments. Massachusetts would have taken the banner for efficient, practical work if we had one. To our sorrow, beer is still sold by consent of the government at our ports. Wonderful progress is noticed among the Scandinavians, especially in the Northwest; many new unions formed among the Norwegians, and Swedish pastors interested. Recommendations: Restricted immigration; a larger interest in these people and a protest against any one voting except citizens de facto by birth or naturalization. Mrs. Ulrikka Bruun and Mrs. Princell have accomplished much good work. Miss Orr, our missionary, is laboring with zeal. Our state superintendents all write encouragingly.

A WORD OF WARNING.—There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

The organizers, whose reports had been crowded out of the program, were then invited to come to the platform. They were presented in a body by Mrs. Stevenson, who referred to them as "the brave, self-denying women who are willing to wait and not be heard."

THE PRESIDENT: I know how glad you would be to hear the voice of each one of these women who have been working for us during the year, but under the circumstances they cannot be heard as we would like to have them heard. But they are so generous, and they have a program of their own. They now have the floor.

Mrs. Ada W. Unruh, president of the board of organizers, made a brief address, which was in the nature of a composite report, and then on behalf of the organizers presented to Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson, the retiring superintendent of the department of organization, a silver tea service.

MRS. STEVENSON: I do not know whether to laugh or cry. They tell me here I look prettiest when I laugh, so I will laugh. But I think it is rather too bad to take me completely by surprise, and it is so beautiful, and just like these dear women who have been so kind, true and loyal and patient during these years that I have been with them. I have not had one moment to go into their meetings at this Convention, for I could not get more than eighteen hours of work into a day. I thank you, dear organizers, with all my heart, and I invite you first of all, and then all the rest of you white-ribboners to come to Massachusetts, and you can have whatever you want out of this teapot, so long as it is strictly temperance and non-alcoholic.

MRS. SKELTON, of California: Can I say a word for California? One of the women said when I came away that I must embrace the Convention, which I do now with all my heart. (Laughter and applause.)

Mrs. Addie Northam Fields, secretary of the board, asked permission to say a word. She said that she was going to Bermuda for the World's W. C. T. U., and asked that all who were interested in departmental work to aid her with literature for distribution.

Mrs. Stevens then read the list of organizers, W's and Y's; each stepped to the front and bowed to the Convention as her name was called.

It was moved by Miss Belle Kearney that a whole evening be given to the organizers at the Convention next year. Carried.

A motion that the next annual Convention be held not later than the month of October, if held north of the Kentucky line, was referred to the General Officers.

Mrs. Clark asked when we were going to send an organizer to Cuba and Porto Rico.

The hour set for hearing the report of the committee on resolutions had now arrived. This was read by Mrs. Bourne, of New Jersey, chairman, and the resolutions discussed seriatim. There was but little debate, and that chiefly on minor points. Following are the resolutions as amended:

Resolutions.

J.L.PRESCOTT & CO., NEW YORK.

Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the United States has sustained an irremediable loss. Hers was a warrior soul. Her life uplifted life. She was the world's friend. Her genius and devotion, her clear vision of duty and swift realization, her eager listening to the next Divine word, and her glad incorporation of that word into deeds of widest helpfulness, made the Woman's Christian Temperance Union what it is to-day; may her influence quicken us to carry on the Christ ideal of her work, and like her, to "so love the world" that, if need be, we shall "lay down our lives" for humanity.

Resolved, That in the death of our peerless leader, Frances E. Willard, Illinois feels especially bereaved, for our grand prairie state was her adopted state, and bears glorious testimony to her great labors for the uplift of humanity. To Illinois was committed the keeping of her precious dust, and the "Old Guard" will never forget that sacred trust, nor surrender to the enemies of "God and Home and Native Land."

MARY T. BURT.

The women of the New York delegation in this Convention stand in loving memory, as we name our state president, Mrs. Mary Towne Burt, among those who this year have entered the life beyond. In the death of Mrs. Burt not only New York, but the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union has lost a woman of consecrated gifts, dignified presence and wise counsels, and she is sadly missed. The cause and our work are richer, stronger for her unwavering loyalty; but we know that she rests from her labors. From us who wait God will require service until the extinction of the liquor traffic.

PREAMBLE.

Upon this, the twenty-fifth annual Convention of the National W. C. T. U., we unite in devoutly thanking God for the Crusade of 1873-4; for our heroic mothers, Mrs. Elizabeth J. Thompson and Mrs. Eliza Stewart, and especially for the life and works of our consecrated leader, Frances E. Willard, now translated to the fields of light, and for the abundant testimony that "her works do follow her." We hereby acknowledge the sustaining power of God's grace in the hours of bereavement as one by one our several leaders have crossed the flood; and in the presence of a congregation of witnesses in heaven and on earth, we do now renew our covenant vows of loyalty to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union as an organization, and to its several principles as enunciated from time to time. Chief among these principles are total abstinence from alcohol as a beverage for the individual; legal Prohibition for the state and nation; the abolition of all forms of regulation of vice; the standard of equal purity for men and for women; equal suffrage; a Christian Sabbath, and the educating and evangelizing of the people; arbitration for all civilized nations and "peace on earth and good will to men."

TOTAL ABSTINENCE.

The fundamental principle in the temperance reform is total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors, for the individual; therefore, we urge its practice upon all people.

We receive with satisfaction the demonstration made by the temperance hospitals, the American Medical Association and other bodies, also by prominent physicians in this and other countries, proving that it is not necessary to use alcohol medicinally, and we gladly co-operate with them in this movement.

RELATION OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT TO THE LIQUOR BUSINESS.

(a) Revenue in General. The income to the general government from the revenue received from manufacturers and dealers in intoxicating drinks deadens the public conscience to the evils of the business, and makes distillers, brewers and saloonkeepers arrogant and dictatorial to the government on the ground of being its benefactors. We, therefore, condemn these revenues as corrupters of the public conscience and a menace to our republican form of government.

(b) Revenue in Prohibition Districts. We condemn the receiving of revenue by the general government from the sale of intoxicating liquors, for beverage purposes, in localities where such sale is prohibited by law, because it encourages the holders of these receipted tax bills, who constitute a class of habitual criminals, to violate state and municipal law.

(c) The Canteen System. Canteens are more deadly than bullets, and our army in field, military posts and camps and our veterans in soldiers' homes are impoverished and debauched by them. We, therefore, protest against soldiers being detailed as bartenders, and against the use of blood money for hospital supplies, and we call upon the Chief Executive and the general government to abolish the system. To this end we urge the passage of the Ellis bill now pending in the United States Congress, prohibiting the sale of liquor on all grounds or buildings owned or controlled by the government. We further urge the passage of a bill to prohibit the sale of liquor in our new possessions and all territory that shall be acquired by us hereafter.

PROHIBITION BY-LAW.

We reaffirm our oft-repeated conviction that the prohibition of the liquor traffic is the only solution of the temperance problem, and insist that true patriotism demands a united, determined effort which shall not cease until prohibition is embodied in the constitution of every state in the Union and in the federal constitution at Washington.

THE BALLOT.

(a) WHEREAS, "God created man in His own image male and female," Therefore,

Resolved, That we believe in the equal right of both to hold opinions and to express the same in the home, on the platform, in the pulpit and at the ballot-box.

(b) As a class representing one-half of the American people, whose status before the law has been defined as that of citizens without the ballot, we earnestly protest against the laws which in fifteen of our states grant the right of franchise to persons who are neither citizens of the United States nor of the state in which their franchise is exercised. We believe that no one should be invested with the ballot who is not de facto a citizen both of state and nation; and we also protest against these laws as unjust and discriminating, as well as calculated to lessen the love and respect which all American women desire to feel for their land and government.

ARBITRATION.

We are in favor of a permanent system of arbitration for all civilized nations and hail with enthusiasm the valorous declaration of Nicholas II, Czar of Russia, against the ruinous armaments of the world, and in favor of an international peace conference.

EDUCATION.

The stability of the Republican government depends upon the intelligence and morality of its citizens. Reforms originate with and are fostered by the people. Teachers should be living exponents of the principles they seek to inculcate, and the environments of our schoolhouses and universities should be free from the evils that are destructive to the individual and to the nation.

Therefore all efforts to educate the general public and the students in our schools in total abstinence, self-control and true patriotism will receive our heartiest co-operation, and we especially commend such papers and other publications as wage a warfare against the degrading influence of the saloon upon our colleges and universities.

WAGES.

We believe in a living wage, and in the application of the Golden Rule to both employer and employed as the best economic system possible.

PURITY.

We stand for the Divine principle and practice of purity in heart and life; we protest against the degrading dual standard of morality, and reaffirm our conviction that only through a "white life for two" does humanity come to its highest physical, mental and spiritual development.

THANKS.

With most sincere and grateful appreciation, we acknowledge the great kindness and hospitality of the people of St. Paul in providing for this convention, and we tender most cordial thanks to each and every person who in any manner contributed to its success or to the comfort of its individual members.

The following department resolutions were offered and adopted after the reading of the reports to which they pertain:

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

WHEREAS, Knowing that through the Inspector General's report of the national Soldiers' Homes that $234,154.33 were spent over the canteen (beer hall) bars of six of the Homes; and,

WHEREAS, Believing that the canteens of the army and navy are more deadly in their results than either the Spanish bullets or trenches; and,

WHEREAS, Knowing that the commander-in-chief of the United States army has not used his prerogative to abolish these canteens;

Resolved, That we, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in convention assembled, do hereby pledge ourselves to use our influence in every possible manner against this inhuman treatment of our boys by creating sentiment in communities, by presenting the matter before influential bodies, and by writing letters to senators and congressmen, so that the Ellis bill may be passed.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

WHEREAS, We feel the deep importance of training our youth in the principles of righteousness, temperance and purity, giving them both the gospel and science as the reason for this hope which we strive to implant in their lives; and

WHEREAS, The Sunday-school is the agency through which the church influences and instructs the young, therefore,

Resolved, That we earnestly request the International Sunday-school executive committee to retain the quarterly temperance lesson in the International Sunday-school lesson system; and,

Resolved, That as Christian temperance workers we call upon Sunday-school teachers and officers to give careful attention to the quarterly temperance lesson and to present the total abstinence pledge in the Sunday-school, and in every possible way seek to keep the youth of our land unsullied by the evil of intemperance.

LEGISLATION.

Resolved, That we authorize the president and secretary of the National W. C. T. U. to petition Congress in our behalf for the following bills:

(1) The Ellis Bill, to prohibit liquor selling in canteens and all government buildings, including military posts, soldiers' homes and immigrant stations.

(2) The Hepburn Bill, to prohibit the transmission by rail or interstate commerce of pictures or descriptions of prize fights.

(3) The Gillett Bill, to forbid interstate gambling by telegraph or telephone.

(4) The Terry Bill, to protect anti-cigaret laws by providing that cigarets imported in original packages on entering any state shall become subject to its laws.

PURITY IN LITERATURE AND ART.

WHEREAS, We rejoice that the International League of Press Clubs, the Woman's National Press Association, the International Press Union, Art Associations and New York Federation of Women's Clubs, are uniting with us in adopting the following resolution:

Resolved, That the National Editorial Association of the United States earnestly sympathizes with the woman's movement for the promotion of purity in literature and art as tending to maintain the moral standard and endeavoring to realize the prime object of the press—the elevation and betterment of humanity intellectually, morally and socially; for the suppression of sensationalism, cruel personalties and immoral details in the reports of vice and crime, which tend only to degrade the moral standard of the community, often inciting to the re-enactment of the horrors thus depicted; and that we will further endeavor to make the press one of the truest and best friends of humanity by refusing space to all questionable and impure advertising; also excluding from our records and doings the untruths and half truths which are often more dangerous and often have more of poison than unmasked vice because of the pure alloy which promotes their circulation.

Notice of proposed changes in the constitution were given as follows:

MRS. HELEN G. RICE: I give notice that at the next annual Convention I, or some one in my place, will move to amend Article 5, Section 1, of the constitution by inserting after the words "state secretaries of the Young Woman's Branch" the words "and state secretaries of the L. T. L. Branch."

MRS. ADA UNRUH: Next year, I or some one in my place, will move to amend Article 4 of the constitution by inserting "and members of the board of organizers."

The members of the various local committees were brought to the platform and presented to the Convention, as the women to whose efforts were due the harmonious conditions which contributed so much to the comfort and happiness of delegates and visitors individually and to the Convention as a whole.

Mrs. Kelly, representing the Catholic Total Abstinence Society of St. Paul, was introduced, and expressed the "hearty coöperation of the Catholic sisters."

The Rev. Mr. Clair, president of the Methodist Preachers' Association, gave as his message to white-ribboners, "Go on."

Then the Minnesota women on the platform sang the state song, which was a fitting close to this pleasant diversion from the routine of business.

Sunday services. Among the good things reported were: Over 100 addresses made by white-ribboners, 150 new members secured and two pastors as honorary members. At the state university twenty-four students put on the purity badge; a Y of fourteen members organized in Grace M. E. church; at the soldiers' home a union of fifteen members formed, and at a meeting elsewhere for soldiers twenty-six of the "boys" signed the pledge.

Mrs. Benjamin moved the following resolution:

That in view of past experience it is the sense of this Convention that hereafter the W. C. T. U. should withhold its endorsement, and hold itself entirely aloof from all affiliated interests over which it has, and can have, no control.

It was late in the afternoon and the delegates were preparing to adjourn, but instantly everybody was all attention, and it was not necessary for the president to rap for order.

MRS. FRY: Does that proposition have any effect on our present affiliated interests?

MRS. BENJAMIN: It would have an effect over every interest over which we have not and cannot have control.

The delegates seemed astonished and for once at a loss for words.

Mrs. Benjamin hastened to their rescue:

"I am very sorry," she said, "to bring this resolution up at so late an hour, but I presented it on the first day of the Convention to the executive committee and they asked me to defer it until all the reports had been heard. And so I have waited until the very last one was in. What has given us all our trouble has been endorsing interests over which we have, and can have, no control. While we feel kindly toward them, and as individuals may do as we please, as an organization we ought not to indorse any such interest. It is a fair thing to put this matter on record and then you can have a whole year to think it over."

MRS. SCOVELL: And be it further resolved that the name of the W. C. T. U. be not allowed to be used in connection with business enterprises or for anything but the regular work of the organization.

Mrs. Hoffman moved that the resolution of Mrs. Benjamin be referred to the executive committee.

MRS. BENJAMIN: I hope it will not be referred. It is too delicate a matter for the post-executive committee. A principle is involved, and this Convention can settle it in a minute.

The Convention, however, voted to so refer it. (The post-executive voted to refer to the General Officers, and the General Officers, at their meeting in Chicago, postponed its consideration for a year.)

At this point a little girl from Texas was presented. She had brought her doll to show to Miss Gordon and tell her that she had named it for her.

It was announced that invitations for the next National Convention would be made the special order to follow the children's program that evening.

Mrs. McCoy, a returned missionary from India, and Miss Palmer, of the Deaconess' Home in Minneapolis, were introduced, and in turn exchanged greetings with the Convention.

Miss Gordon moved that the last group of reports be adopted. Carried.

Mrs. White-Kinney moved that all unfinished business be referred to the executive committee. Carried. Convention sang the doxology, and the benediction was pronounced by Miss Vincent, of Australia.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Children's Hour.

Mrs. Stevens called the meeting to order and announced Mrs. Helen G. Rice, general L. T. L. secretary, as the presiding officer, assisted by Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, National superintendent of Sunday-school work.

These two departments had united in furnishing the program for the children's hour. The chorus was under the direction of Mrs. J.B. Foltz, president of the Hamline L. T. L., and Miss Lillian M. Hollister, L. T. L. superintendent for Minnesota.

The selections and general program of the evening were arranged by Miss Anna A. Gordon, World's superintendent L. T. L. Among profuse decorations, the Union Jack graced one end of the platform and the Stars and Stripes the other.

Miss Agnes Davis sang a solo written by Miss Kate Lunden, "We are Coming, Dear Leader." She was answered by a chorus in the distance, and the singing children marched in and took seats upon the platform. The choir upon the platform then sang, "Saloons Must Go," and were joined by marching lines of little folks coming down the aisles of the church with banners. They were soon seated in the gallery on either side of the platform, and the audience read upon their banners such mottoes as "Only the Golden Rule of Christ can bring the Golden Age of Man," "Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up," "Character is habit crystallized." The children sang an adaptation of the Lord's Prayer, and "America" was sung by the entire audience.

The Sunday-school children of St. Paul paid a beautiful tribute to Miss Willard in an exercise prepared by Mrs. Irvine. Little girls in white, and boys, came forward, reciting a Scripture quotation, and handed Mrs. Irvine a bunch of white chrysanthemums, which she fitted into the massive frame surrounding a large picture of Miss Willard. When completed, it made a magnificent white wreath around the sweet face and form of our promoted Chieftain. A young girl closed this part of the exercises with a beautiful apostrophe to Miss Willard. A solo was sung by Miss Emily Bruggeman. The first temperance pledge signed by Miss Willard was taken by the children in concert. A very small boy recited Miss Willard's pledge for boys. "Now's the time for you" was sung. A flashlight picture was taken of the children, to be given to Anna Gordon, one or two recitations followed, and Miss Gordon was called for. She said a few words, thanking the boys and girls. The "Song of the Flags," composed by Miss Willard, was given, and the little folks marched out to "Saloons Must Go," amidst much enthusiasm on the part of the audience.

Mrs. Barker made the collection speech, Mrs. Graham sang "Victory," and the children's hour was closed.

SECOND PART OF THE PROGRAM.

Mrs. Stevens spoke of the pleasure the Convention had had in its musical director, Mrs. Graham, and especially of their appreciation of the song, "Victory." A whistling number was given by Miss Maud Pratt, of Minneapolis. She responded to an encore.

By special action taken in the afternoon invitations were now received for the next annual Convention:

MRS. KINNEY, of Oregon: I was delegated by all the states west of the Rocky mountains to ask you to come to us. It is no further from the Atlantic to the Pacific, than it is from the Pacific to the Atlantic. For several years I have been commis-

CATARRH OF THE STOMACH.

A Pleasant, Simple, but Safe and Effectual Cure for It.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs, and difficult breathing; headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue, and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do, and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlandson the safest and best treatment is to use, after each meal, a tablet composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal, and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drug stores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthy appetite and thorough digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher, of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition, resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach, thus producing catarrh of the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure; but to-day I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I can not find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book mailed free on stomach troubles, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. The tablets can be found at all drug stores.

sioned by the governor of the state, and the mayor and every philanthropic society in the city of Portland to invite you to go there. If persistent women in Seattle or down in Los Angeles should get you to come to them we would not sulk in our tents, only so you come to some city on the coast.

MRS. GRAY, of Washington: "Go west, young man, go west." So say I, "go west." I bear invitations from state, county and local unions, the Chamber of Commerce, Ministers' Alliance, all send a strong appeal to come to Seattle.

Mrs. Hammond, an original Crusader, also spoke for Seattle.

MISS MARY L. PAGE, president West Washington: It is a land "where every prospect pleases." We are the gateway to the Atlantic. We are the center of the United States now since we have the Philippine Islands.

Mrs. Hoffman repeated the telegrams read to the Convention at the morning session, sent by the Chamber of Commerce, the Daily Post Intelligencer and the Times.

Seattle delegates shouted, "Seattle '99, Seattle '99."

MRS. MARY A. KENNEY, president Southern California: So far we have never had to offer special inducements to get people to come to California. I bring an invitation to Los Angeles from the city council, the ministers' meeting, many ladies' societies, the coming governor (a Los Angeles man), and I will, as soon as I get home, have the mayor begin his arrangements to be with us, and see that his health is well taken care of. (Laughter.) We can take you in three hours from a dip in the ocean to a sleighride. Seattle folks swear by the weather. Los Angeles never has any weather to make them swear. We hope to see you in Los Angeles in 1899.

Miss Cornelia Dow invited the Convention for the twentieth time to Portland, Me.

Mrs. Stevenson announced invitations from Detroit, Mich., Niagara Falls and Cincinnati, O. Mrs. Stoddard said the latchstring hung out all the time for us in Texas.

Mrs. Stevens announced that the selection of the place must, according to by-law, be left to the executive committee.

Announcements were made by Mrs. Hoffman.

Mrs. Katharine L. Stevenson called the Honor Roll and presented a fine etching of Miss Willard to Mrs. Mabel L. Conklin, Brooklyn, N. Y., and Mrs. Helen D. Harford, Oregon, who had secured the largest number of members for the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Boole, of New York, presented the National, on behalf of the artist, Mrs. A. W. Stocking, with the large crayon portrait of Miss Willard, which had adorned the platform throughout all of the meetings. Mrs. Stevens responded in fitting words, and sent heartfelt thanks to the artist.

The following banners changed hands, each for the largest gain of members in the group of states to which the giving and receiving states belonged.

Mrs. Boole, of New York, to Mrs. Chambers, of Pennsylvania, who said, "We play catch and toss with this banner hereafter, for we mean to keep it between us." Mrs. Bourne, of New Jersey, to Mrs. Clark, of Ohio; Mrs. Forbes, of Connecticut, to Mrs. McWhirter, of Indiana; Mrs. Cartland, of North Carolina, to Mrs. Kenney, of Southern California; Georgia, to Miss Lynch, of the Thurman union; Miss Lynch, of Georgia, to Mrs. Ferguson, of Oklahoma. All of these women made short, appropriate, and often facetious speeches in giving and receiving the banners for their several states.

Miss Gordon then presented the three banners which were offered by Miss Willard for the first time last year for the largest gain in membership in districts, counties and local unions. The first two went to Kansas, the sixth district of that state having added three hundred members, and Osborne county having added 250 per cent. The local union banner went to Harvey, Ill., it having an increase of ninety-two members. Mrs. Hutchinson received the two for Kansas, Mrs. Rounds received the one for Harvey, the Illinois delegation standing. Mrs. Waddell, president of the first district, took charge of it, and expressed thanks. These were white star-spangled banners, the last gift of Miss Willard, and as Miss Gordon said, "pure white like her life."

Mrs. Stevens now announced the consecration service. "Guide Me, O thou Great Jehovah," was sung, the audience standing. The hour was so late that the roll-call for scriptural quotations or those from Miss Willard's writings, was confined to the General Officers. Many beautiful selections were given.

After these Mrs. Rounds moved that "this beautiful and ever memorable Convention do now adjourn." The question was put, Mrs. Stevens read Mary A. Livermore's parting hymn, Mrs. Rounds and Mrs. Barker quoted Willard words, white-ribboners joined hands and sang the hymn, after which Mrs. Stevens pronounced the benediction, and the Crusade Anniversary Convention stood adjourned.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

DEAR SISTERS:—This column should be filled this week by your new corresponding secretary, but she has kindly offered to allow me the privilege of bidding you a loving goodby. It is very hard for me to come to that word. Glad as I am to go to my home and thankful as I am to take up my new work, I yet find that the ties holding me to National Headquarters and to the constituency at large, are even closer than I had dreamed, and it is with sadness that I realize that I am no longer to have these weekly talks with you, am no longer to belong to you in the close relationship which I have enjoyed for four years. I want each one of you personally to feel that this goodby is meant for you and that, though I am going out of this particular field of work, I am not going to anything that will sever me from our great work, as a whole. I can hardly imagine that I shall feel less interest in every state and territory than I feel now. I can but believe that those who have been so closely bound to me by ties of love and a common cause will remember me with prayer and loving thought, even though I no longer am to remain in the same field. I especially wish for my successor the same loving, cordial cooperation you have given to me. You will find her true-hearted, loyal, strong and tender. Give to her your prayers and help, and I believe there is before you a year of better work than ever before.

I want to ask the pardon of the state corresponding secretaries for failing to meet with them in conference, also of the National organizers. This was an especially hard Convention. In addition to my duties as corresponding secretary, I was on the resolutions committee, on the appropriations committee and the credentials report took more of my time than ever before, because of the necessity of having it very exact for the yea and nay vote. Then, too, we were one officer short on the platform, and I did many of the things which in other years were done by the vice-president-at-large. I tried my very best to reach you in conference, and was more disappointed than I can express that I failed to do so, but you must have seen that there was not a moment's time in all the hours which could be spared for it without taking you out of Convention, and I felt that that would not be right. The questions sent by the corresponding secretaries I shall preserve and make use of later on in a symposium or editorial in THE UNION SIGNAL.

While my heart goes out in love to every white-ribboner, it goes out in an especial degree to the two brave bands with whom I have been most closely associated, the state corresponding secretaries and the National organizers. God bless you and give you strength and courage day by day and hour by hour, is my earnest prayer. Remember I shall always be glad to hear from you, and always think with love of every one with whom I have been connected during these four busy, happy years. My address will be the headquarters in Boston, 171 Tremont street.

Dear sisters, I can not close without a little word of exhortation, to which you have grown so accustomed as coming from me. Let us set our mark high for the coming year. Ask largely that your joy may be full. I can but believe that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has cures, that multitudes of former sufferers consider it nature's antidote for rheumatism. Many a bedridden person, also some who walked on crutches, regained their health through this marvelous cure and in order that every similarly afflicted reader or their friends may learn about it, I will gladly mail them a trial package with directions for use and other information free, even if more than 15,000 persons should apply. Distressing cases of rheumatism from 20 to 40 years standing yielded to the benign influence of this remedy of which I mention a few: In Pittsburg, Ind., it cured a druggist whose rheumatism dated back as far as the civil war. In Kenterville, Idaho, it cured a man who was bedridden for 15 years. In Fountain City, Wis., it cured Hon. Jacob Sexaur, a man who suffered for 33 years notwithstanding employing 7 physicians. In Seguin, Texas, it cured a man who was afflicted for 41 years. In Amsterdam, N. Y., it cured a lady who nearly became insane from pain. Mr. J. T. Carter, of Fork Church, N. C., a reader of the Christian Endeavor World, was quickly cured after suffering untold agonies for many years. Mr. N. H. Spafford, of Newton, Mass., says that through the kind Providence of the Lord, he was directed to Mr. Smith's remedy and was quickly cured after suffering for several years.

The original letters of above cures, besides thousands of others can be seen at my office. No one should despair but write for a free trial package and other information. Address John A. Smith, 800 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON OUR NEW PROBLEMS.

Our people are beginning to realize that well nigh all the questions of government—restrictions of suffrage, parochial versus public education, civil service reform, prohibition, the civil Sabbath, brutal amusements, the opium traffic, colonial government, monopolies, even slavery—have been thrust upon us by the acquisition of our new islands, and therefore a widespread interest has already been aroused by the announcement of a national conference on these themes in Washington, December 13-15, during the second week of the new session of Congress, which promises to be the most interesting and momentous of any session since the Civil War. The speakers who have consented to discuss these themes in the convention include such specialists as Dr. Josiah Strong, Dr. Howard H. Russell, Anthony Comstock, Gen. C. H. Howard, Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, Dr. M. D. Kneeland, Dr. Teunis W. Hamlin, Dr. Frank M. Bristol, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, Mrs. Margaret D. Ellis, Mrs. E. M. Thacher, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, with more to follow. The open discussions, where everybody, who knows more than anybody, will contribute the statesmanship of the people to the solution of these problems, will be hardly less important than the more formal speeches. Mrs. Frances Graham, the sweet soloist of the N. W. C. T. U., will make the music a feature of interest and power. For program and further particulars address Rev. W. F. Crafts, 210 Delaware Ave., N. RED-LETTER DAYS.

PEACE DAY.—December 18.

For the promotion of "peace on earth."

CRUSADE DAY—December 23.

The anniversary of the going forth of the Crusaders at Hillsboro, O., 1873.

THE National Minutes and the new Annual Leaflet will be ready soon after January 1. The price of the Minutes will be as usual, fifteen cents per copy. The Leaflet will be mailed to any one on receipt of postage. Send all orders to Mrs. Helen M. Barker, the Temple, Chicago.

AT the Farmers' National Congress, held last week in Fort Worth, Texas, a paper read by Mrs. Minor, of Dallas, on woman's country clubs, provoked lively debate. The two great civilizing agencies, maintained Mrs. Minor, were soap and woman's clubs, the latter doing as much for the betterment of women as does soap for the unwashed. More privileges for farmers' wives were pleaded for and the discussion doubtless produced a desirable arrest of thought among the delegates present.

IN view of the fact that letters continue to come to the National Officers from white-ribboners asking for information concerning Temple matters, and in view, also, of the lack of knowledge evinced by the public generally with regard to the financial status of the Temple enterprise, the General Officers have thought it wise to publish in the official organ the questions and answers found on page 8 and 9 of this issue. These set forth as clearly and succinctly as possible the conditions which were the basis for the action taken by the St. Paul Convention.

SEATTLE, '99! It was decided in post-executive session to accept the invitation of Seattle for the next National Convention. It will be a long journey for many of us, but then, as Mrs. White-Kinney reminded us, it is no farther from the Atlantic to the Pacific than from the Pacific to the Atlantic. And this affords an opportunity for all delegates to "go west"—an opportunity never before afforded by the National Convention. Other cities which extended invitations are Cincinnati, O., Niagara Falls, N. Y., Portland, Me., Portland, Ore., Detroit, Mich., and Los Angeles, Cal.

AN important meeting is in session in Washington, D. C., as we write—that of a National Conference the object of which is the consideration of the new problems, especially the new drink problems, which confront this nation. We regret that the Convention report and other matters have prevented our giving more extended notice to this conference. It is one of the few instances of a convention managed chiefly by men in which half the speakers are women. Among the white-ribboners who take a prominent part are Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, Mrs. Margaret D. Ellis, Mrs. E. M. Thacher, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, Mrs. Clinton Smith, and our sweet singer, Mrs. Frances Graham, is in charge of the music. The purpose is to make concentrated effort at this time to save Alaska and our new islands and our soldiers from the saloon, and it is hoped this conference will aid in influencing Congress to right action in these vital matters.

ALTHOUGH it happened over two weeks ago this is the first opportunity we have had to mention the luncheon given by the women at National Headquarters in honor of the retiring and the incoming corresponding secretaries. It was one of those occasions which serve to brighten and to lighten the work of the "Temple toilers," and was planned by Mrs. Horning and Miss Sara Johnson, who, with other young women of our force of workers, admirably arranged and daintily served the luncheon. Mrs. Stevens presided. Mrs. Barker, in behalf of the National officers, presented to Mrs. Stevenson a framed copy of Hoffman's head of Christ, which work of art is now of especial value in the eyes of all white-ribboners by reason of its association with Miss Willard's last hours upon earth. Mrs. Hoffman, also in behalf of the National officers, welcomed Mrs. Fry with a bouquet of American beauties, and Mrs. Beauchamp, for the young women, gave to Mrs. Stevenson a beautiful bunch of pink carnations. The recipients, in each case, responded in fitting speech, the remarks of all being a happy combination of tenderness and humor.

CASTILE, N. Y., where Miss Willard and Miss Gordon spent the winter two years ago, gave our new vice-president-at-large a warm and tender welcome last Sunday. A visit to her mother and sister was the occasion of Miss Gordon's stopping at Castile en route to New York and Charleston, and the people of that place rejoiced in the opportunity to greet the one who had organized the L. T. L., and with Miss Willard and Dr. Cordelia Greene, accomplished so much for the uplift of the village. The boys and girls marched into the church singing and presenting flowers. The sound of the fresh young voices so dear to Miss Willard, singing "Saloons Must Go," brought acute pain to Miss Gordon's heart, and for a few moments it was impossible for her to respond to the loving welcome, but after the glorious old hymn, "Jesus, I my cross have taken," was sung by the audience, she gave a reverent and inspiring account of the Convention, thanking God for the humility, wisdom and spiritual power of the new leader, and rejoicing in the belief that our translated Frances Willard still loves and leads, and that all will be guided by the Light that "illumined the pathway she trod."

THE President's message, read to both houses of Congress on Monday, December 5, is as usual a voluminous document. It fills over fourteen ordinary newspaper columns and deals with interests national and international—from the Spanish-American war, its causes and results, to cattle and hogs and dried fruit. It discourses upon Cuba and Porto Rico and Hawaii and the Philippines, upon protection for our colonies, our commerce and our currency, but suggests no plan for the protection of our homes and the improvement of our citizenship. It indorses the Czar's peace proposition, but recommends the increase of our army to double its present numerical strength. It urges the adoption of methods for the prevention of yellow fever, but maintains a discreet silence concerning greater dangers which menace military and civil life. It calls attention to the burdens and waste of war, but ignores the heavier burdens and greater waste of that legalized horror which destroys more than war, famine and pestilence combined. Of course no one expected Mr. McKinley to make any allusion to the liquor traffic. The most ardent admirer of his "temperance principles" could not hope that he would express sympathy with the "well-directed efforts" of temperance reformers even in as mild a way as his party has done. The reason why the President—whose high Christian character no one questions—can not do so is obvious, and furnishes the most potent argument for the existence of a political party with a prohibition plank in its platform.

Am disappointed that other duties detain me. Thousands will watch your proceedings with intensest interest. The more closely you adhere to the great purpose of your earlier organization, the greater will be your usefulness and the more potent your influence for good. Total abstinence, prohibition and woman's enfranchisement are worthy the most devoted effort and can best be served by laying other burdens down. May great wisdom and heavenly counsel guide you in this important crisis. SAMUEL DICKIE.

It is hoped that harmony will prevail and that no action will be taken that will check or retard your great work for "God and Home and Native Land." Keep this noble and inspiring motto constantly before you and incidental difficulties will gradually fade away; love and regard for your late great leader's memory should demand that all discussion about a memorial for her should be conducted with love and harmony, not with bitterness and division. At the proper time a fitting memorial will be erected to her memory, but the greatest memorial that could be built would be as nothing compared to a united organization of Frances Willard's co-workers and followers. Convention Notes.

THE editorial correspondence from the Convention stated that a paper on "Purity's Greatest Foe," was given at the Purity Conference by Miss Rose Wood-Allen. The writer unwittingly got the Rose and the Belle "Mix-ed." Both young women took an active part in the conferences, but the address on the subject named was given by Miss Belle Mix. Orders for the printed leaflet should be sent to Miss Mix, at Danville, Iowa.

THE report of Miss Jennie Smith, National evangelist, was received too late to be incorporated in that of Miss Greenwood. Her work this year has been confined to seven states, and she reports over 200 meetings held in the churches, sixty in shops, fire engine houses, police courts, factories, etc. More than three hundred souls converted, over fifty new members gained for the unions, two thousand signed the pledge. Many schools have been visited, 14,000 cards and hundreds of tracts used.

THE following changes are noted in the official boards of superintendents, lecturers, evangelists and organizers: Miss Belle Kearney, of Flora, Miss., widely known as a successful organizer, becomes a National lecturer; the list of organizers is strengthened by the addition of Mrs. L. E. Bailey, West New Brighton, N. Y.; Mrs. Lucie H. Additon, Lents, Ore., and Mrs. Vie H. Campbell, Evansville, Wis. The new evangelists are, Mrs. A. B. Church, Crown Point, Ind., Mrs. Harriet Todd, Boston, Mass., and Mrs. L. S. Rounds, Chicago, Ill. New superintendents are, Mrs. Evalyn Graham, Newark, O., Work among railroad employés; Mrs. E. A. Shores, Ashland, Wis., Lumbermen; Mrs. M. E. Kuhl, Champaign, Ill., Miners; Mrs. Angie F. Newman, Lincoln, Neb., Flower Mission; Mrs. C. B. Buell, East Hampton, Conn., Christian Citizenship. The purity work was divided into three departments under the following superintendents: Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, Elmira, N. Y., Purity; Mrs. Jessie Brown Hilton, Evanston, Ill., Mothers' Meetings; Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake, Chicago, Ill., Rescue Work.

A Crusade Song.

BY MARY BYNON REESE.

A LOWLY consecrated band
That loved the Master's name,
With patience waited on the Lord
Until the answer came.

"Go forth, ye trusting ones," He said,
"In faith to sing and pray,
No evil shall your steps befall
I have prepared the way."

Dark shadows swept the wintry sky,
The tempest echoed loud,
But oh, we knew our Father's face
Smiled on us from the cloud.

No threats disturbed, no fears oppressed,
Nor care lest man should mock,
We heard the gentle Shepherd's call,
"Fear not, ye little flock."

His love doth keep, His presence leads
Our footsteps, day by day,
The while we march and pray and sing,
The while our brothers pray.

Rescued.

BY MAUDE WOOD-HENRY.

WHEN Christopher Broom was a bald and podgy baby, kicking and grunting in his mother's arms, no one dreamed that he was to become the sot of the village of Trumbleton. Had such an idea lodged in the brain of good Mrs. Broom, she would never have done weeping, and it is probable she would more willingly have consigned her baby to a little pine coffin and laid him away in the Methodist burying ground than to have assisted him, through the process of care and nourishment, to his fate. But, as I have said, no one dreamed of such a dire happening. At this immature period of his existence his appetite inclined sturdily toward a mug of fragrant, warm cow's milk, a mug of ample proportions, which never failed him when most needed, a nightly comforter, a joy in the morning, a healer of bruises, whether of the heart or of the flesh.

What changes, of a mental, moral or physical nature, brought about the metamorphoses of Christopher Broom, history does not relate. At the age of fifty he abhorred a cow as a fountain from which to slake his thirst, and clung tenaciously to a long-necked bottle, the contents of which appeared to please him vastly. If he thought of the mug of his infancy at all, as he drained these later day draughts, he thought of it with scorn, and not even the memory of his mother brought a regret for his lost youth. Who would exchange a bottle of nectar such as this for a hundred mugs of cow's milk. Bah! It made him sick to think of it! That was when the bottle was full. But when it was empty, a very legion of devils claimed Christopher Broom, and any mentionable condition of life was preferable to his.

Perhaps it was a strain of blood inherited from some dead and gone ancestor that changed Christopher Broom's appetite. Be this as it may, his wife, when he took one, could never bring herself to blame him. The mother of Christopher Broom had not been able to fathom the moral degeneracy of her son, and the wife could not be expected to, certainly. The contents of the larder diminished steadily, for Christopher Broom gave up work altogether, and held high carnival with his chosen companions. Presently he lost his identity and became the village sot. Mrs. Broom, regretting to the last that strain of degenerating blood, but tranquil in the knowledge that she had kept a decent larder in spite of every obstacle, died, and left Christopher Broom a little surprised. He buried her in a dazed sort of way, and then devoted himself with renewed gusto to the long-necked bottle. Sometimes, now that his wife was gone, Christopher Broom set himself to work, and so he managed to keep the bottle full for the most part.

As is always the case when a drunkard has lost his identity, he became conspicuous. The scant money which he earned all went into the bottle, and with no wife to keep his garments orderly, he appeared in picturesque tatters, and was a subject for fear and curiosity to the village children.

Christmas day found Christopher Broom in a dismal condition. No one would employ him. He had hitherto depended upon such jobs as he could pick up about the village for the sustenance he required, and now for a week he could find nothing to do. The food in the larder was exceedingly low, but he would not have minded that had not the long-necked bottle been empty. It had been empty for three whole days, the longest period in its history. Christopher Broom made himself a fire on Christmas morning, and warmed his outer person in lieu of his stomach, but it illy sufficed him and he soon donned his ragged coat and left the house. He stopped several times and asked to be allowed to shovel the snow from doorsteps, for it had snowed steadily all night and the wind had drifted it about considerably, taking seeming delight in piling it in high banks on every path and porch. But the people shrunk from him, or told him boldly that their honest money should not go to drunkards if they knew themselves, so he was obliged to hasten on.

"I must get that bottle filled somehow," muttered Christopher Broom, and he directed his steps to the saloon known to Trumbleton as "The Palace." There were two saloons in the village, the rival to "The Palace" bearing the somewhat facetious title of "Temperance Hall." Jacob Meyers, the proprietor of "The Palace," was a good-natured Dutchman, always ready to laugh and crack a broad joke with his patrons, but looking well to their accounts in the meantime. When Christopher Broom entered "The Palace" on Christmas morning, he found it deserted save by its jovial keeper. Perhaps the unwonted holiday had prompted the habitual loungers at Meyers' to linger for a time beneath their own roof-trees, and possibly to join their children in their merry-making. But whatever was the reason for their absence, it served only to accent the distressing condition of the village sot and to make the contrast between him and the ruddy-faced Dutchman more sharply defined. Christopher Broom had come to a bad pass, indeed. He was sadly out at elbows and not overclean, and the long neck of his bosom friend peeping from his ragged pocket told the whole story.

"A merry Christmas, Mr. Broom," bawled out Jacob Meyers as his visitor seated himself by the stove. "Mr. Broom." No one had called him that for many months and Christopher Broom resented it now as an insult. He looked up quickly at the saloonkeeper while a flush came into his face, but he could find nothing in the jovial countenance of Jacob Meyers to affront him.

"I say," he began hesitatingly but resolved, "I say, Mr. Meyers, it bein' Christmas, I'm about askin' a favor of ye."

"All the favors you want, provided you back 'em with rocks," laughed Jacob Meyers. "Something to wet your whistle with, you mean, don't you, Mr. Broom?"

"It's empty!" said Christopher Broom, producing the long-necked bottle from his pocket and shaking it unsteadily, but with an effort at humor, in the saloonkeeper's face. "Empty as a bunghole, for, lemme see how long."

"Three days, Mr. Broom, only three days, since I undertook to do you that favor for the seventh time. The seventh time, what do you think of that and not a red in the till to show for it." The big man shook his head deprecatingly, as if in rebuke to himself for his liberality, and Christopher Broom looked dejected.

"I tell you, Mr. Broom," continued Jacob Meyers in a tone of conviction, "you ought to brace up, that's what you ought. You're drinkin' too much, more'ns good for you."

"Yes, yes," returned Christopher Broom weakly, "I mean to stop one of these days, see if I don't, but not on Christmas, nohow. You wouldn't refuse a poor devil like me a little consolation on Christmas, now would ye, Mr. Meyers?"

"Not another drop unless you've got the tin to pay for it," maintained Jacob Meyers, steadfastly. "And, now that I think of it, maybe I wouldn't fill your bottle if you had the tin." And he slapped his round thighs as if a sudden idea had come to him.

"Not if I had the tin!" echoed Christopher Broom, astonished.

"Maybe not," chuckled Jacob Meyers. "Anyway you ain't got it, so what's the use of talkin'?" And at the call of a shrewish voice he left the room.

Christopher Broom sighed. Then he arose and walked from "The Palace," turning his steps toward "Temperance Hall."

"No use tryin' there. Credit's all used up," he told himself as he neared the door, and then, with rare decision, he made a detour of the place, and resumed his hunt for work. All that bright, frosty Christmas day he tramped the streets of Trumbleton, and felt the pangs of hunger as well as thirst. Deprived of his bottle he reflected a little and regretted his lost condition. As one after another of the villagers refused his proffered assistance and gave him a piece of their minds as well, he felt wretched, indeed, and wondered if the town had entered into a plot to ruin him. "If this goes on I'll starve to death, and be buried in the poor lot," he reflected, bitterly. "Where's all that Christian charity I hear about, I'd like to know? Christians! Humph! Never saw one. There ain't such a bein' on top the earth, else they'd give a man work when he asked for it. Christmas day, too! I've smelled pies and things that made my stomach groan, it bein' empty as a gourd since mornin', and now I'll go home and nibble on a crust, and little they'll care!"

This burst of inward indignation restored a feeling of manhood to Christopher Broom. He felt himself injured by the world, and he walked straighter for the feeling. The early night came on and enveloped him. Stars looked steadfastly down upon the white earth. A full moon shook its radiance like diamond dust over the village, and the bells in the steeples tolled out their sweet and solemn tones. There were hints of Christmas festivity in the lighted houses, the shadows of children cast upon drawn curtains, shrill bursts of laughter and gleeful snatches of song drifting out into the night, and once the village sot caught a glimpse of Kris Kringle himself, with ruddy cheeks and snowy whiskers, presiding over a huge evergreen tree laden with bright-colored gimcracks. At the sight of the old holiday saint Christopher Broom snuffed suspiciously, and even drew a grimy hand over his bleared and watery eyes. He remembered having seen his exact counterpart in his youth, long before he had acquired his present cognomen, or made the acquaintance of the bottle. Visions of long-forgotten Christmas joys swam before his sight—red mittens, sleds and drums, tops and sweeties. And he recalled the very stocking he used to hang in the kitchen on Christmas eve for old Kris to fill.

Christopher Broom left the lighted streets of the village in a peculiar frame of mind. His attempt at self-satisfaction was not of long duration. He dimly recognized his own fault, and knew down deep in his dormant consciousness that no one was to blame, after all, for his miserable condition but himself. "No use talkin' about reformin', though," he ejaculated, in a spasm of honest feeling. "Too late fer that. Can't get along 'thout a drink, nohow. It's all the consolation a poor lone feller has." He had an uncomfortable time of it communing thus with himself, and hastened to rid his mind of the whole affair and to shake off the shame that he felt somewhere within him.

Meanwhile, let us leave poor old Christopher Broom, stumbling along in the snow, hungry, thirsty and dispirited on this happy Christmas night, and see what is transpiring within the Trumbleton doors that are closed upon the village sot. Of course, you say, every one is scurrying about mysteriously, whisking suspicious looking packages out of sight of prying eyes, lighting Christmas trees and laying Christmas feasts. We know all about that! We do it ourselves every year. But, my friends, you are wholly mistaken. Trumbleton people are doing quite another thing. Let us peep into that house, for instance, where Christopher beheld Kris Kringle and the Christmas tree. What is the old fellow doing now, pray? Why, he is lifting the tree bodily and carrying it out of doors, and—yes—he is loading it into a big sled to which is harnessed four horses, all ajingle with bells, and there is a subdued murmur of many voices and a hundred admonitions to "be careful," and now and then a stifled giggle that you know very well emanates from a young and foolish maiden.

"Is the coast clear?" It is Squire Upton who is asking the question—Squire Upton in the guise of Kris Kringle and now busily engaged in loading the great sled with all manner of baskets and bundles.

"Clear as can be," answered a neighbor. "Nate Simms 'll have him in tow. He's been gone all day and I saw him a little while ago trundlin' along in the snow a good ways from home. He's sober for once, though."

"Yes, he went to 'The Palace' this morning, but Jake Meyers didn't give him anything. He kept his promise all right."

"An' he's been trampin' all over Trumbleton tryin' to get a job of shovelin' or somethin'," said the voice again.

"Poor old man—poor miserable old man," spoke up a soft woman's voice.

"He'll think he's rich to-night," chuckled a young fellow. " 'Spose he'll imagine he's drifted into fairyland by mistake."

The little house where the drunkard lived had once been noted for its appearance of thrift and order and many homely flowers grew about the door, planted and tended by Mrs. Broom's own hands. Since her death the home had suffered sadly and it looked forlorn indeed to the merry company that alighted at its door.

"We'll have to break in a window," some one suggested. "No need of that," replied Squire Upton. "Broom seldom leaves the house locked, I hear. Most likely we can walk right in." And walk in they did, one and all, setting to work with a will as soon as they got there, the men building huge fires from the wood they brought, and the women sweeping, tidying and unpacking with the most surprising swiftness. The younger people busied themselves with hanging evergreens, and their nimble young fingers soon had the whole house festooned in the most approved fashion. Kris Kringle himself erected the loaded tree in the front parlor and lighted the candles and then began the preparations for the feast in honor of the village sot.

While all these things are happening, let us return for a while to Christopher Broom, whom we left in the snow, illy pleased with his Christmas prospects. Shortly after he fell in with Nate Simms, one of the Trumbleton villagers, who, strange to say, evinced a desire to converse with the outcast, and soon, so subtle and warm are the approaches of sympathy, Christopher Broom was pouring into his ears all the woes and miseries of his being.

"Come along to my house and we'll talk it over," said Mr. Simms. "Nobody at home, all gone off to a Christmas doin's; we'll set in the kitchen a spell and look into your case." And much to the surprise of Christopher Broom, he was hurried to the house of one of the most respectable men in the village, one of the very houses where he had applied that morning for a job of snow shoveling and been refused. There in the comfortable kitchen of Mr. Simms, with the pleasant feeling of a cup of hot coffee in his empty stomach, Christopher Broom listened to such a plain statement of his own case as to make him actually blush. At the end of an hour he fairly loathed himself, and when he left the house Nate Simms held in his hand a pledge of the village drunkard's future sobriety and an agreement that he would begin work for him on the morrow at his big sawmill down on the creek.

"Go home, Broom," was Nathan Simms' sly parting shot, "and celebrate Christmas night as you haven't done in many a year. P'r'aps I'll drop in and keep you company after a bit. A merry Christmas to you and God bless you!"

"Thank ye kindly, Mr. Simms," responded Christopher Broom. "'Twill be a poor sort o' Christmas celebration, I'm thinkin'; the old house is not the same as once 'twas, but I'll fix up after to-night, see if I don't." And with an effort that would have been pitiable had it not been the sign of an awakening manhood, he straightened back his shoulders and lifted his tattered hat to his deliverer.

"We'll have to help him mightily if he keeps that," murmured Mr. Nathan Simms, as he fingered the pledge. "Jake Meyers and others 'll be after him again when they find out he's earnin' money. But we'll look after him. Trumbleton's in earnest this time."

Christopher Broom thought some pretty serious thoughts on his way home. He had taken a decided step and he realized it, and even now the thirst for drink was strong within him. "Got to do it if it kills me," he told himself. "I've promised Mr. Simms and I'll keep my promise. Pretty pass I've come to, and all through that cursed bottle. Betsy told me same as he did many a time, and I wouldn't listen to 'er. Wish she knew I meant to stop drinkin' for sure."

And now comes the surprise. Christopher Broom has arrived at his own gate, and is staring in wonderment at the lights and laughter that issue from within his house. He rubs his eyes in a dazed way. What can it mean? Is he in the wrong street? No, this is his house, his very own—but who is here? He goes haltingly up the walk and the door is thrown open in his face while a stream of light and warmth comes to him pleasantly, and a hundred voices are shouting, "Welcome home, Mr. Broom! A merry Christmas, Mr. Broom," and soft, white hands are dragging him in and removing his old coat and his tattered hat. Such a sight as met Christopher Broom's eyes! It overpowers me even to write of it. Never had he seen anything so glorious as the long table spread with the Christmas banquet—turkeys piping hot, marvelous roasts and gravies, puddings and pies, jams and cakes, and what else I do not know. And above the roaring and crackling of wood fires was such a chattering of happy voices as the drunkard had never heard. He was totally astonished, and could only open his eyes and stare. Whereupon, seeing his amazement, Squire Upton, in full Kris Kringle attire, stepped up and addressed him.

"Mr. Broom," he said, "this being Christmas night, I decided to come down out of my northern home and pay you a little visit. Some of your good neighbors waylaid my reindeer and insisted upon coming with me, so in order to pay them for their impudence in stopping Kris Kringle on his annual tour to this country, I ordered them to bring along their supper and Christmas tree and share it with us."

And then it was that Christopher Broom returned to the beverage of his childhood. He gasped, looked wildly about him, and espying a mug of milk on the board, he caught it up and drank to the health of the doughty saint and the assembled company in the following words: "Sir, ladies and gentlemen, I thank ye kindly for this visit. To-night I signed the pledge for Nathan Simms, and a mug of milk is the strongest drink I'll ever taste again, God helpin' me."

At this such a cheer arose as fairly shook the house, and every hand there was offered to Christopher Broom in hearty congratulation. Suddenly the children struck up a Christmas anthem, and their voices swelled in glad chorus, "Peace on earth, good will to men." Did village sot ever have such a welcome home, I wonder?

After the feasting, Kris Kringle revealed the mysteries of the Christmas tree, and to the delight of all and the amazement of Christopher Broom, every gift was deposited in the arms of the reclaimed drunkard. Such a wealth of warm comforters, caps, socks, mittens and garments as was bestowed upon him, besides a supply of winter goodies for his empty larder, a cushioned arm chair and a host of things which I can not even remember. These gifts so bewildered the poor man that he finally closed his eyes in speechless pleasure, while the tears coursed down his cheeks, and the twinkling lights, the merry faces and the gay festoons of red and green adorning his cottage walls, faded from his sight.

Trumbleton has never done talking of this occasion. Nathan Simms' foreman, Mr. Christopher Broom, enjoys it as well as the rest, for while the pledge he signed did not free him wholly from the long bondage of drink, he found a helping hand outstretched whenever temptation threatened, and eventually "The Palace" and "Temperance Hall" meant no more to him than it did to any other good man of Trumbleton.

The Crusade Banyan Tree.

BY ADA MELVILLE SHAW.

THE number of people of average intelligence, who have no conception of what "those women" have been about for the past twenty-five years, is surprisingly many. And, those other intelligent people, who think they know and know not, all are discouragingly numerous. Of the scope of our work, its dignity, its complex simplicity, its diversity in unity, perhaps the white-ribboners themselves have not all an adequate conception.

Native to the East Indies and Ceylon is the banyan tree. Every branch from the main body sends out roots. These, at first mere tendrils high above the earth, reach down growing thicker until they touch the ground. There they root themselves, become great trunks from whose branches other roots are suspended, and so on, the only limits to growth being the limits of space and sustenance.

Twenty-five years ago, on prepared soil, God let fall a seed—a little living seed. The W. C. T. U. was born. Straight toward heaven it grew. It branched. The branches rooted and developed. They, in turn, sent forth living members. There has been "no end to it." God grant there never may be! The world is its area, the sunshine of God's blessing its sustenance.

A banyan tree, as it multiplies and spreads, must, of necessity, change local conditions. A barren tract, hitherto unawakened by bird notes and unfriendly to man, becomes in a quarter of a century a garden of beauty, the home of song, a retreat for man, a blessing to the world. Is this not true of our Crusade banyan? For twenty-five years it has been steadily growing. It is safe to say that this growth has been an instrument, under heaven, of bringing about blessed changes in world conditions. The sapling was slender. They were but bands of timid, praying women on whom saloonkeepers sneered or smiled pityingly. As the spirit of prayer swept on, the sneers and smiles changed to frowns of anger and fear. Soon the women realized that work must go hand in hand with prayer. Organized departments of work took root one after another. The development of these "trunks" all about the parent stem has been phenomenal and it is almost impossible to trace the growths to their source.

Take for example the department of scientific temperance instruction. Twenty-five years ago what did children hear or teachers know or care about the influence of alcohol upon nerve centers? But now! whole libraries on this subject are printed for teachers who are under legal obligations to give regular instruction therefrom. And, since we were bound to teach the children scientific temperance, scientists were drawn into our reform vortex and are using every means to drag King Alcohol's secret powers to light. Lawmakers, school boards and scientists thus clasping hands, the publishers and the illustrators became interested, and presto! to-day, a child of ten can trace a drop of alcohol from tongue tip to resultant torture. Heredity may have doomed him to a drunkard's grave, environment may try to shut him away from progress to noble things, but HE KNOWS and he is saved. Yet, we have only mentioned the initial letter of the alphabet of influences and consequences that have sprung from temperance taught scientifically in our public schools.

The department of physical culture has been a lively branch. Tight dresses have stretched to lung size. The dance has been forsaken for the gymnasium. The sale of rouge has fallen off we dare not say how much. Tommy no longer fishes and tramps and nuts and swings Indian clubs alone, for Sallie is beside him and his sports have grown less brutal, more manly. Novels have been dropped for nature's book of wonder-tales. Waist-girths have increased. Life has been more worth living. Children have come to mother-arms with increased chances of winning in the life-race, and God alone knows by how much, the histories of unhappy home life, undermined constitutions, morbidly induced suicides and moral deaths have been decreased.

The department of the press! Who can count the noble trunks that have sprung from this one-time slender, down-dropping root? There she sits—the newly inaugurated local press superintendent of years ago. She is a busy mother. She does not "know how to write," save rambling letters to the boy at college or the daughter-bride for the first time away from home. An editor is a great unknown. Type is a mystery, printer's ink as rare a thing as attar of roses. But—she has promised to report the work! The cause she is praying for must somehow be brought before the people. It is midnight and long past before that first "copy" is ready. It is mailed to the editor. It is—waste-basketed. But there are more midnights and more reports. Prayers and tears, too, nourish the hesitating plant. One day a line or two appears in the "local daily." Next a paragraph, then a quarter of a column. One day the little press superintendent finds herself jubilant. The women have a column to fill regularly. How she must study! How wise she must be!

Well, it goes on that way in local unions all over the land. To-day, reporters visit our gatherings. The Associated Press takes care of us. The big city dailies never forget us altogether. But best of all, in our own ranks have arisen a host of women who are editors, correspondents, poets, story-writers, essayists—who never would have ventured into the land of printer's ink but for that beginning in our press departments. They write, these eloquent, earnest ones, for God, for home, for country, and the world sits at their feet and reads.

We insisted, once upon a time, on unfermented wine at sacrament, and lo! the religious and secular papers began to bristle with advertisements of grape juice. Women who had no other field of work spent fall days in preparing this pure nectar to be sold to churches or given away to the sick. Ease and cheapness of preparation have loaded home shelves with rows of bottles whose contents give life and destroy not peace. Doctors recommend grape juice instead of wine, and by so much the devil is cheated of alcohol victims.

The department of legislation and petitions —how it has waked women up! Dusty law tomes have pushed embroidery needles aside. Chit-chat has given place to debates. Helpless ignorance, at the mercy of wicked cunning, has changed to cunning outmatched by knowledge of and enforcement of laws. Women lawyers plead woman's cause, and man-made laws cease to be dead letters when women pounce on them and bring them to public notice.

But we must forbear. Time does not suffice to speak of blessings that have come to those outside our organization that would have come, at least tardily, but for the active life of the W. C. T. U. From our forty odd departments of work, carried on in every state in the Union according to local needs, a mighty pulse of education has gone out that has quickened and warmed the life of the nation. Woman's cause in its every phase, has taken root and grown to grand proportions. Industries have been affected. Political, ecclesiastical, legal, educational, moral and spiritual reforms have been molded and hastened forward by the W. C. T. U. The world is a safer place for souls since God dropped that living seed in 1873.

Storms have swept over our banyan tree, but it lives and grows more mightily every year. By God's grace its life shall go "on and on and on" till there be no saloon-made deserts on the face of God's green earth.

Secret Alcoholic Drinking.

BY T. D. CROTHERS, M. D.

THERE is a large number of secret drinkers, both men and women, who delude themselves with the idea that no one is aware of their addiction. Yet it is practically impossible to use spirits in any form for any length of time without betraying this fact. It may be possible to deceive associates and friends for a time, and explain the slight defects of thought and act as due to some other causes, but critical eyes soon see through the mask.

The secret drinker soon shows defects of memory and want of attention. He does not follow any connected line of thought; the mind moves from one topic to another rapidly and without reason or connection. He repeats both in thought and act, as if he was not aware of what he had said or done, or had fears that he had mistaken the work. Or he becomes dogmatic and assertive in both act and thought, his mental operations are more feeble, with hesitating or bolder and more incautious. There are changes in both the form and activities of life. The old ambitions, tastes, and accustomed ways of everyday life suffer a change, like the first shadows of approaching twilight, dim and misty, but more and more prominent.

Some of these subtile changes have come to me to determine. A most exemplary woman became irritable and untruthful in small matters. She was using spirits in secret and this was the sign. Another woman grew melancholy and suspicious of wrongs by others. A third woman became ambitious to go into society, and used unusual efforts to accomplish this. A fourth woman became profoundly religious, and wanted to spend all her time in church and prayer meeting. In all these cases this unusual conduct and change of thought was due to spirits taken secretly. A noted clergyman began to repeat suddenly in prayers and sermon, and grew very angry when his attention was called to it. He was a secret, midnight drinker. Another reserved and very dignified minister suddenly put off his reserve and became an emotional, crying evangelist, praying and weeping with every one. He was found to be a secret ginger drinker. I was called to see a noted temperance lecturer, whose growing egotism and grasping dishonesty and prevarication indicated some mental disease. After a time he was found to be a user of bitters which contained twenty per cent of alcohol. The removal of this was followed by recovery.

Of course these obscure changes of conduct and thought are not always due to the secret use of spirits, but it may be considered a marked symptom of some rapid changes going on in the brain. When we can not discover any common usual causes it is always wise to look for spirits or drugs secretly taken, as responsible. It is true in nearly all cases, that loss of memory and power of attention to any one topic, with emotional changes, are common symptoms in alcohol and drug takers. With it is associated a coarseness of language and manner unobserved before. Want of attention to the ordinary courtesies of life, a loss of high standards of honor and regard for truth, and carelessness of dress and the proprieties of society are other significant symptoms. Alcohol is a paralyzer of all the higher functions of the mind, in some cases going on slowly, in others rapidly. But in all instances obscuring, lowering and deranging the judgment and memory and literally throwing the man out of harmony with himself and surroundings.

The secret drinker is no doubt injured in the same way as others, and his foolish efforts to conceal this act, intensifies the injury, which after a time breaks out in some unexpected form ending fatally. The sudden, unexpected death of persons previously supposed to be well, have in many cases revealed the fact of secret spirit drinking of many years' duration, with destruction of vitality and general decadence. Life insurance companies are often aware of this fact, and appeal to me for help, but it is exceedingly difficult to convict or prove secret drinking in a man with a large insurance, and more difficult after death to bring out this fact. The law in these cases will seldom allow presumptive evidence, it must be direct and positive of the use of spirits. I am sure that unmistakable insanity is present in some cases, seen in the unusual cunning and wise calculation to procure spirits and conceal its effects.

I am also convinced that the use of bitters at first is responsible for much of the secret drinking. The bitters create a demand for alcohol or opium and then its use is continued secretly. I think patent drugs to quiet pain are also very dangerous and should never be used. Secret drinkers are keeping alive smouldering fires which never die out, but go on charring and breaking down, until sudden and final collapse ends all.

Hartford, Conn.

Willard Hall Echoes.

THE Crusade spirit is still dominant in Willard Hall. The cry of mothers for help is just as agonized as of old. The boys, weakened and polluted by drink and uncleanness, are coming to us for redemption. God is answering prayer and raising up friends for the friendless, giving hope for the faithless, strength for the weak one.

Prayer is asked for revival meetings now in progress. That a husband and wife may have more power in work. That a father may be restored to his family. That two sons may be converted in the meeting. That a daughter may be so helped in her business that her aged mother may have her home saved for her declining years.

A man said, "I always read all I can about Willard Hall, for I love the work done here. I have heard of many petitions presented and know the prayers have been answered. Now mine eyes behold and my ears are gladdened by the testimonies of those who have been redeemed in this hallowed place."

A woman said, "Let me talk to you a little. I want to show you a picture of my boy." It was a beautiful face. Weeping she went on to tell how only a year ago her only son shot himself in a saloon. He was always a good boy—brought up in a Christian home, but when about twenty he fell in with bad companions and the second time he went into a saloon, while frenzied with liquor, he shot himself. The poor mother was broken-hearted in her sorrow.

Fathers and mothers, this may come to any of our homes while the liquor traffic is allowed to run riot in our streets. In Chicago every fifth boy, according to statistics, must become a victim to this curse in order to fill the present ranks of the doomed. Will you keep quiet and run the risk of its being your boy? Or do you hope it will come no nearer than your neighbor's boy, and thus you stand neutral on this great question? God forbid.

A lady coming out of the Hall said, "I am on the way from San Francisco to New York. I always wanted to see the Temple and have only a few minutes between trains but hurried here. How beautiful it is!"

Many gentlemen come because their wives are W. C. T. U. women and want to hear directly from Willard Hall. Such testimonies as these gladden their hearts: "Oh, how I struggled to give up strong drink, but Jesus set me free when I asked Him to." "I believe in a God who lifts up and then keeps." "Many Christians are weak because they have to spend all their religious strength taking care of themselves and have no time or strength for others. Jesus Christ came to give His divine nature to us which should make us forget self in giving and doing for others." "I used to notice the smell of every saloon I passed, but now God has saved me so completely and filled my mind so full of His love and work I never notice it."

Correspondence.

An Open Letter.

DEAR WHITE-RIBBON SISTERS:—It was to me a great cause of regret that on account of physical disability I was at the last moment obliged to decide to remain away from the Purity Conference at St. Paul. Yet I had no fears for its success. I knew that workers, tried and true, would be there to present the cause to the expectant public and to discuss problems with those who had come hoping to learn how to carry on the work in their own unions.

The reports that have come to me indicate that the conference was most successful. The audiences were large and deeply interested and the interest grew with each session.

It was a great pleasure to be represented there by my daughter, who, assisted by Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, presided at the meetings. Every mother will appreciate the help it is when one's children give their sympathetic aid in the mother's work.

It will not be possible for me to give a detailed account of the conference. I hear of Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake's enthusiastic efforts in behalf of the erring, of Mrs. E. M. Adams' excellent paper on the "Spiritual Life of the Child," of Miss Belle Mix's notable address on "Purity's Greatest Foe," of other addresses and papers of equal value, of the deeply interesting and practical discussions of all the phases of the department work, and in the far-away quiet of my own room I rejoice in all that the conference accomplished.

But in the midst of my joy is a pang of regret, for by the entreaty of friends and the command of the physician, I am to step out of the ranks of active workers and sitting in quiet solitariness see the work go on without me.

Most of you are doubtless aware that at this last National Convention the purity department was divided into three departments: Rescue work, with Mrs. Isabel Wing Lake, the Temple, Chicago, as National superintendent; mothers' meetings, Mrs. Jessie Brown Hilton, Evanston, Ill., superintendent; and purity, Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, Elmira, N. Y., superintendent, and I bespeak for each of these new superintendents the same loyal coöperation you have given me. You will consult with them, work with them and report to them.

The division will temporarily make a little confusion in the states, which can be overcome in time by the states falling into line with the National plan. It has already been productive of confusion, and in some states mothers' meetings has been a separate department. These states will now find themselves in harmony with the National. In the states where the purity department still remains undisturbed I see no way but for the purity superintendents, local and state, to carry on the different phases of the work as they have been doing and report each particular phase separately, the local unions to the state superintendent, and she to the National superintendent of each particular branch—the rescue work to Mrs. Lake, mothers' meetings to Mrs. Hilton, and the other phases of the purity work to Mrs. Bullock. Then at the next state convention in all probability the same division of the work can be made as now maintains in the National.

And now, sisters, let us renew the work with increased enthusiasm. I say us, for although I am trying to be a nonentity, I know full well that in spirit I shall be with you even as I have been in the past, and I want to feel that the work is gaining in power and usefulness.

It may be that you will not quite like the division of the department, but never mind. The work is all here, and it is all one. We may create departments, but we cannot destroy the unity of the work. Whatever name we may give the subdivisions, they all unite to form one great unit of effort for humanity.

As ever, yours for the cause,

MARY WOOD-ALLEN.

The Country of the Dragon.

DEAR EDITORS SIGNAL:—The sweet strains of "God be with you till we meet again" sung by a chorus of sympathetic voices as a crowded launch sailed back through Yokohama's beautiful blue harbor on the morning of October 5th, still rings in my ears. Those last days in the Mikado's city were blessed days, but Mrs. Large will tell you about them, while it is my privilege to take you with me through the lovely Inland Sea, winding in and out among thousands of "Emerald Isles" and on to the country of the dragon and the queue.

Twice I went ashore, at Kobe and Nagasaki, ere we took our last farewell of the land I had learned to love so much. In the former place two meetings were arranged, one with the women of the city, the other with the college Y's. At Nagasaki the students of the three colleges came together. Some extraordinary things happened while we were in the last named city. The governor's wife, who is not a Christian, sent a special messenger, requesting that a service be arranged for the ladies of her class. Alas, that "time and tide" and boats "wait for no man!" This shows how widespread is the interest here. If only the people of the homeland could see their opportunities!

Another illustration of the influences of the work which will be an inspiration to young women everywhere. When I first came to the far East I repeatedly said that I was looking for a Frances Willard for Japan. Many of those who heard me say it declared that Miss Omura, a teacher in Miss Russell's school at Nagasaki was the one, and I tried to secure her last year, but she had not yet felt the "call." On my arrival there, however, she came to me of her own accord and announced that she was now ready to give herself completely to the work of the W. C. T. U. I believe she is all the friends had represented her to be, and hope the way may open for her to go to Mrs. Large.

The Kobe Maru steamed up the Yangtse river to Shanghai at noon on Wednesday, October 12th. I had asked dear Mrs. Farnham not to herald my coming, but to let me rest quietly for a little while, and then slip away to Burmah with new courage for the fray. Her mother-heart understood, so for the first time since I saw you the burden of responsibility is lifted a wee bit, and I am getting a real change. When things "got a going" in Japan I could not stop, so I decided, since I had only a few days in China—one could not hope to do a work in this immense empire that would tell, in a day or two, you know—to get the needed recreation here by simply not beginning things.

Dr. and Mrs. Farnham are lovely. It is no wonder the latter is an earnest, "up-to-date" white-ribboner, for the good husband is the kingliest "knight of the new chivalry" you ever did see. Born a hundred years before his time, I tell him. Mrs. Farnham is "holding the fort" bravely, but they are very anxious that reinforcements should be sent at once, and would suggest Miss Ruth Shaffner, since she already knows something of Chinese thought and customs. We have talked much about poor China, particularly in the evening hours, and my experiences in Japan make me feel that there is a harvest waiting here, too. May some prosperous state or group of states adopt the opium land next year!

Several days have elapsed since the above was outlined, and now I am on the Yangtse river, again, returning from the Methodist girls' school at Chinkiang. Two years ago the principal, Miss Mary C. Robinson, and I came out together, and finding ourselves congenial spirits have kept in touch with each other's work. The Chinkiang union is the most flourishing in all China. Indeed, it is perfectly marvelous what has been accomplished in this line by one busy missionary, and shows the wonderful possibilities of our organization everywhere. Ten years ago the society was formed, and since that time seventy-five regular meetings have been held. At each of these the catechism has been recited, songs from our white-ribbon hymnals sung, and a paper prepared by one of the members on some department, or perchance it is a character sketch of one of our leaders. The knowledge that these girls have of our work and workers would put many a local union at home to shame. They have given $14 (gold) too to the World's W. C. T. U. during the year. What mission union has done better? I fear we do not all know the meaning of "self-sacrifice."

The memorial service for Miss Willard, which this union held, was a great inspiration to all present. The life of our Chieftain was divided into six or seven parts, and given to as many different girls to portray.

On Sunday afternoon, October 23, there was a joint meeting of the young men's and women's societies, Miss Laura White interpreting for me. I wish you could have seen the two hundred or more earnest faces. Miss Robinson, in her gentle, winsome way has wrought great things, and well merits her verse in Proverbs: "Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all." Remember the workers in China, especially at the noontide hour, for these are troublous times in the "Celestial Empire."

Last night the moon was shining high up in the heavens when I left the college to go aboard my boat, and there, hidden in the shadows of the garden, were all the girls singing so softly and well our beautiful "Some Glad Day." "All round the world our ribbon white is is twined." Thank God for that, and that He has given one band to yours always and lovingly,

CLARA PARRISH.

A Letter From the Countess Schimelman to American White-Ribboners.

DEAR MISS GORDON:—As I am not able to make the long railway journey to St. Paul, I want through this letter to tell you and our fellow workers, how I regret not to be with you. I would have enjoyed to give and receive sympathy. I had wanted to speak a word to the American sisters coming from a full, warm heart of sympathy for them. I see clearly of what importance for the world the standing is the American woman takes with the education she gets and the possibilities that are within her reach. Her influence will bring a new era to the world.

I would have liked to lay before you the distressing state of things in Europe, where (except in England) conventionalities and ignorance tie the movements of woman in such a close bondage, that the noblest powers are lamed and made useless. Things must not be allowed to go on any longer as they are. Yet prudence is necessary because the wicked woman stands ready to grasp any liberty given to misuse it in a fearful way. And this would make the good woman retire only deeper behind the prison walls of conventionalities. I have been hard at work the last years and gained little more than to be acknowledged myself as an "exception."

Yet I have some little plans that might in the hands of your Convention become the first steps to free the Christian woman in Europe from the bondage that hinders her freely and openly to serve Christ. You do much for the women in India. I assure you, that a great part of the women in Europe are not less ignorant and less in slavery than the former, though the slavery is not made by their husbands but by senseless conventionalities. I want the American woman to teach her sister in Europe that freedom in action does not necessarily entail an unwomanly behavior, and that knowledge and interest stretching farther than her own house and family, does not necessarily make an unpractical, blue-stocking.

Let the type of the American woman develop more and more to its ideal, which distinctly is a well-educated, out-and-out Christian lady; and send some of your best representatives of this kind over to Europe to do mission work there among the good Christian women.

My love to you and the W. C. T. U.

Yours in Christ,

ADELINE COUNTESS SCHIMELMAN.

A Suggestion for the New Year.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—"If people would quit treating, more than two-thirds of the saloons in the country would have to close up, and what remained would have a hard time to exist." This remark was made to me by a saloonkeeper not long ago, and it has occasioned a good deal of thought on my part. Of course, the suggestion is not a new one, but it is interesting on account of its source, and also in view of the fact that it led me to resolve not to treat any one for a period of one year and to induce one friend to join me in the resolve. This resolve I kept.

If it is worth anything coming from a man who occasionally takes a drink, let me suggest that every lady whose attention is called to the matter induce at least one of her gentleman friends not to treat any one during the year 1899. She may be able to do a world of good in this way. Try it, and ask your lady friends to do the same, and see if good results do not follow.

AN OCCASIONAL DRINKER.

A Crusade Reminiscence.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—This is a true story of Crusade times. A dentist who lives at this place was a boy in Ohio at the time of the Crusade. He tells of the women going about praying in the streets and drinking places. They would sit in the saloons with their knitting and sing hymns, causing many to close their doors and stop their awful business. One man was hailed by a friend with, "Well, Charlie, have they made you shut up, too?"

"Yaas, I shust can't shtand it! Dem vimmens come and sit dere, and knit and sing, and knit and sing, 'Rock mit ages,' 'Rock mit ages,' all de time. I hear noddings but 'Rock mit ages.' Ven I gits up I hear 'Rock mit ages,' ven I eats mine dinner I hear 'Rock mit ages,' ven I goes on de shtreet I hear 'Rock mit ages,' and ven I lays down to shleep I hear 'Rock mit ages.' I shust can't stand it! I shuts up, and I don't hear 'Rock mit ages' any more."

This Queer Old World.

IT is queer how things go by contraries here,
'Tis always too cold or too hot,
And the prizes we miss, you know, always appear
To be better than those that we've got;
It is always too wet, or too dusty and dry,
And the land is too rough or too flat,
There's nothing that's perfect beneath the blue sky,
—But—
It's a pretty good world for all that.

Some people are born but to dig in the soil,
And sweat for the bread that they eat,
While some never learn the hard meaning of toil,
And live on the things that are sweet;
A few are too rich and a lot are too poor,
And some are too lean or too fat—
Ah, the hardships are many that men must endure,
—But—
It's a pretty good world for all that.

The man who must think envies them that must be Ever pounding and digging for men,
And the man with the pick would be happy if he Might play with the brush or the pen!
All things go by contraries here upon earth,
Life is empty and sterile and flat;
Man begins to complain on the day of his birth,
—But—
It's a pretty good world for all that.

How Chandar Became a Member of the Loyal Temperance Legion.

BY ELLA BARTLETT SIMMONS.

IN far-off India lived a man and woman who had two children, a boy and a girl. The parents were proud of their son, but did not appear to be very fond of their daughter, simply because she was a girl. They thought the gods must have been angry with them to have given them a girl instead of another boy, and when strangers would ask their father how many children he had, he would reply: "I have one child, a darling boy," not thinking the girl worth mentioning.

One day the missionary came to their home and requested that little Chandar and his sister be permitted to attend school in the neighborhood. After much persuasion the father gave permission for Chandar to go, but said, in regard to Maharani, "She cannot learn, she's only a girl. Besides, it is not according to our customs here in India for boys and girls to attend the same school."

Then spoke the Memsahib, "If we start a girl's school may she attend that?"

"Yes," replied he, reluctantly.

Accordingly, the next Monday the children started to their respective "Madarses." Ere long it was discovered that the sister, though the younger, was really learning the more rapidly; in fact, it greatly surprised her father, because she was only a girl. She had a beautiful voice, and sang the Christian hymns, much to the gratification of the mother if not the father.

One day both children came home greatly excited, saying that the missionary lady had told them she desired to organize a "Fouj" (society) and wished the pupils to ask their parents if they could join.

"What kind of society is it?" inquired the father.

"It is one that does not allow us to drink or smoke," answered little Maharani, sweetly.

"Stuff and nonsense, what harm can tobacco do!" exclaimed he. "You know well enough that everybody in India smokes. Girls as well as boys use the hooka from the time they are two years old. You need not think you can join any society where you have to promise not to use it, either. Of course I believe it is all right not to drink, but there is no harm in smoking."

The little girl said no more, but Chandar came close to his father, and sitting on the ground by his side, said: "Won't you come to the school to-morrow, and hear what the Memsahib says about it?"

"Yes, I will go if you wish it, pride of my heart," was the reply.

He was much interested in everything he saw and heard, especially the reading of the Bible. Toward the close of the session Mrs. Parker spoke again of the Loyal Temperance Legion, and read to them the pledge:

"God helping me
I promise not to buy, drink, sell, or give Alcoholic liquors while I live,
From all tobacco I'll abstain,
And never take God's name in vain."

Then turning to Chandar's father she said, "How do you like it, sir?"

"I like it all but the fourth line. I do not drink nor believe that others should; neither do I swear. We Hindoos worship many gods, yet would never dare to take the name of one of them in vain. But I cannot, for the life of me, see how you can object to tobacco. If you will show me wherein its use is harmful I will give it up, and let the children join the society."

And while Mrs. Parker is telling him the evil effects of tobacco, with which you are all familiar, I will tell you something of the "Madarsi." The schoolroom was on the flat roof of the house. The whole house, as well as the roof, was made of mud, but it was hard and smooth and neatly whitewashed. The pupils were all seated directly on the roof, as the natives of India scarcely ever use chairs. Their slates were made of wood, painted black; their pencils were also of wood. These they dipped in a preparation of earth and water, which, when dry, presented a clean white mark. This "ink" was held in small earthen vessels, which they had themselves moulded by hand.

While the missionary was talking to Chandar's father about the harm of tobacco, she also told him how much better it was to love and reverence the one true God than to worship idols, and asked him to become a Christian. She gave him a copy of the New Testament, which he promised to read. As he was about to depart, he said, "Well, I do believe you Christians are a very good set of people, and if you are willing to teach my children for nothing and feel that it is a good thing for them to join the society, I will give my consent."

He took the Bible home and read it faithfully, often going to the house of the missionary for advice and explanation. The result was, that in a few months he became a Christian, much to the joy of his wife and children.

Castle Rock, Col.

General Sheridan and His Son.

TWO grave, quiet-looking men stood on the steps of a big house in Washington some years ago. They were watching four bright children get into a cart and drive down the street, throwing back kisses and "goodby" to papa and papa's friend, the general.

The younger man, the father, was Gen. Phil, Sheridan—"Fighting Phil," as he was called in those days. The general, the old friend, said:

"Phil, how do you manage your little army of four?"

"Don't manage; they are mischievous soldiers, but what good comrades! All the good there is in me they bring out. Their little mother is a wonderful woman and worth a regiment of officers, John. I often think what pitfalls are in waiting for my small, brave soldiers all through life. I wish I could always help them over."

"Phil, if you could choose for your little son from all the temptations which will beset him the one most to be feared, what would it be?"

General Sheridan leaned his head against the doorway and said soberly:

"It would be the curse of strong drink. Boys are not saints. We are all self-willed, strong-willed, maybe full of courage and thrift and push and kindness and charity, but woe be to the man or boy who becomes a slave of liquor! Oh, I had rather see my little son die to-day than to see him carried in to his mother drunk! One of my brave soldier boys on the field, said to me just before a battle, when he gave me his message to his mother if he should be killed: 'Tell her I have kept my promise to her. Not one drink have I ever tasted.' The boy was killed. I carried the message with my own lips to the mother. She said: 'General, that is more glory for my boy than if he had taken a city.'"

Our Cozy Corner.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—It seems a long time since we had a chat in our Cozy Corner, and so many little letters have accumulated that I must only take space to say "How are you?" and let the cousins have a chance to visit. Stewart Stout has a nice little letter and he very generously offers to send a sprig of holly to any one who will write for it. That is particularly nice just now with Christmas so near. I hope in all your plans for the holidays you are including some of the children who are usually "left out," for we must always remember that it is "more blessed to give than to receive."

Lovingly yours,
AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—My mother is president of the W. C. T. U. and my father is a Prohibitionist. They both belong to the W. C. T. U. We have a little pig and a large one and a cow and a calf. I heard a story about two boys who saw the letters G. A. R., and one said to the other, "What are those letters for?" and he said, "Don't you know what that means? It means 'grandpa is all right,' and mamma said that is as much as some people know what W. C. T. U. means." From your Loving friend,

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am ten years old and have been a pledged member of the L. T. L. for five years. My two brothers are pledged too. My mamma is the leader of the L. T. L. Miss Margaret Wintringer spoke for us at our state convention on L. T. L. night. We liked her very much; she stayed almost a week at our house. I have a pet chicken, a pet dog and cat and rabbit, pigeon and white mice.

Your nephew,

DEAR COUSINS:—Mamma and I have wished we could hear how you succeeded with your cotton plants. You nearly all sent too late and if you wish more seed just tell us on a postal card. There is a pretty tree that grows on Pine mountain, the holly. It is an emblem of "perseverance" and mamma says that is a good motto for temperance boys and girls. To any one sending stamps for postage we will mail a spray of holly with red berries.

Our Crusade and Its Future.

OF all organized reform bodies, perhaps none are "compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses" as the white-ribbon hosts. Some watch us with loving confidence, and though they serve in other detachments of the Lord's army, cheer us on our way and never doubt the issue. There are not a few who protest that they "have nothing against us" yet wag their heavy heads and declare that we are "dying at the top." Our enemies—all those who make for unrighteousness—jeer, of course. But their jeers are interrupted by frequent frights and falls. For ourselves, we are much too busy in "the race that is set before us" to take frequent surveys of the field. It is fitting, however, at this Crusade anniversary season, that we pause to read the future from the past.

The tooth of time can not corrode the granite of God's plans. Any one who reads the story of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union can but exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" Nor is this self-praise. There is a self-acknowledgment that must accompany all true success. He who recognizes himself as an instrument in God's hands, can meet the best results with true humility, thank God, take courage and go forward. In this spirit we would cast up our accounts and make a prophecy.

The saloon had not been without opposition up to the time when the Crusaders laid siege to it. But the sword of the Lord in woman's hand, enlarged the field of battle, strengthened weakening fortifications, discomfited the enemy and made sure the day of victory.

When wives went out from their threatened homes to meet the liquor fiend in open fight, they sounded a bugle call that thrilled to the world's heart. It was: A white life for two! The sound of that silver horn has never faltered. From outpost to outpost it leaps in tones that grow sweeter and stronger. Husband lips have sent the holy echoes flying, and the day is written down in God's appointments when purity shall reign for the sons as well as for the daughters of God.

When mothers joined the Crusading hosts, what power was seen in those home-serving hands to shut saloon doors and lead the young men and maidens and the little children away from paths that go down to destruction! What eyes so keen as mother-eyes to discern the hidden traps of the foe? What feet so tireless as mother-feet to follow the erring ones? What hearts so true as mother-hearts to pray and plead and plan for the children's safety?

Sisters and sweethearts swung into line. The enemy trembled anew. Before the steadfast opposition of America's young womanhood, the liquor fiend might well cower! Countless wine cups have been shattered, countless white ballots have been cast, hosts of young knights have kept their manhood spotless, because the girls—God bless them!—raised their modest hands against the enemy of their love and home.

Then tramp—tramp—tramp—came the eager irregularity of little feet. The children had come out to war! It was a Baby, born nineteen centuries ago, that led the world-march toward peace and righteousness. It is the children of the white-ribbon hosts who are the real leaders now. The dimpled hands that cling to ours to-day, shall to-morrow hurl the enemy from his throne. What have the children done? What have they not done? They could not preach but they could sing. Their stirring temperance songs have quickened older feet that lagged in the march. Their brave little banners have put to shame more than one disheartened standard-bearer. Baby fingers have written the gospel of temperance on sleeping parent-consciences. Men who had obeyed the dictates of whiskydom, when a cradle came to the hearth wrote new ballots for God and home and country. "Teacher says beer is poison"—a child's testimony turned milk into the beer pail. "Teacher says tobacco is nasty"—rosy lips turning away in disgust from tobacco-kisses have later had a sweet reward. "Teacher wants me to sign this"—at sight of the pledge-card parent-thought received its first arrest in God's name.

Such is a bare outline of what the years have witnessed of the work of the white-ribbon hosts. This reform backed by mothers, wives, sisters, sweethearts and children cannot abate. Behind them stands the Mighty One of Israel who has never known defeat.

Education is opening the eyes of ignorance. Legislation is casting up a highway for the progress of the right. Spirituality is overcoming sensuality. Wives are wiser, mother-love is mightier, sisters and sweethearts were never so winsome nor so witful, and childhood never so precious as now. God put a torch into woman's hand and pointed her to the fortifications of the legalized liquor traffic. His own breath has fanned the flame. New hands, emptied of selfish treasures, are stretched out to receive the flaming brands. The battle was never so hot as now. For the future we can only say—the fire will spread as far and wide as we will let it! We wrestle not against flesh and blood. Our weapons are not carnal. The issue is for God. If God be for us, who can be against us?

Temple Questions Answered.

By the General Officers of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

1. Question. What is the Temple?

Answer. It is a large and handsome office building, situated on the corner of Monroe and La Salle streets, in the city of Chicago, Ill.

2. Q. Is it the property of the National W. C. T. U.?

A. It is not. The Temple is the property of a private corporation, known as the Woman's Temple Building Association, composed of all of the stockholders.

3. Q. Does not the National W. C. T. U. have its headquarters in the Temple, and does it not control the rentals of the building?

A. The National W. C. T. U. has its headquarters in the Temple, for which it pays rent as it would in any other building. The society does not control the rentals of the Temple, and indeed, it has nothing to do with the control of the building in any way.

4. Q. What, then, is the relation existing between the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Temple?

A. The Temple is called an "affiliated interest" of the National W. C. T. U.

5. Q. What is understood by the term, "affiliated interest," as used by the National W. C. T. U.?

A. That the particular enterprise is in harmony with the lines of W. C. T. U. work, and that the organization gives to it its good will, and, so far as possible, its help.

6. Q. Who was the originator of the Temple plan?

A. Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, of Chicago.

7. Q. What was the purpose which led her to engage in the enterprise?

A. That of affording headquarters and a revenue to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union; also a hall which could be open every day and in which the reformatory work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union could be carried on.

8. Q. When was the subject first officially broached to the National W. C. T. U.?

A. At the annual convention held in Nashville, Tennessee, in November, 1887.

9. Q. What was the proposed cost of the building, as presented at that National Convention?

A. $800,000.

10. Q. Was the enterprise, as presented there, endorsed by the convention?

A. When the plan was first presented to the executive committee the restriction was laid upon it that the building should not be erected upon leased ground. A resolution endorsing the enterprise failed to pass the convention and was referred to the post-executive committee. The post-executive committee passed a resolution promising not to hinder or embarrass her, "Provided she (the originator of the plan) shall legally obligate herself not to begin the work until $500,000 shall be secured."

11. Q. Were these restrictions met?

A. They were not. The Temple was built upon leased ground, and at this date, eleven years later, not half of the $500,000 has been secured in gifts.

12. Q. Did the resolution mean actual cash gifts, or subscriptions for stock to be afterwards bought with money raised by the W. C. T. U.?

A. The resolution called for gifts, and both the letter and spirit are violated when it is asserted that the amount was raised through subscriptions of stock to be afterwards purchased by the W. C. T. U. at par value.

13. Q. What was the actual cost of the Temple?

A. $1,265,000.

14. Q. What was the modus operandi of its erection?

A. A stock company, called the Woman's Temple Building Association, was formed. Stock was sold to the amount of $600,000. This proving less than one-half the cost of the Temple, building bonds to the amount of $600,000 were issued as a mortgage upon the building.

15. Q. Who purchased the stock?

A. Capitalists of Chicago—principally Mr. Marshall Field.

16. Q. Who purchased the building bonds?

A. The entire block was taken by Mr. Marshall Field, and is a part of his gift to the Field Museum of Chicago.

17. Q. Who owns the ground upon which the building stands, and what is its annual rental?

A. Mr. Marshall Field is the owner and the ground is leased at $40,000 a year for 198 years.

18. Q. Is this a generous lease?

A. It was, but it is not so generous to-day, because of the decline in money value. Before the lease expires it may be a most oppressive rental.

19. Q. If, then, both the ground upon which the building stands and the Temple itself are the property of Mr. Marshall Field, what is the relation of the National W. C. T. U. to the enterprise?

A. Wholly a relation of hope and of hard work to help the Temple Trustees to secure sufficient money to purchase the stock and pay the building bonds.

20. Q. Have results justified this effort?

A. They have not. After ten years of hard work only about $15,300 worth of stock was held for the W. C. T. U. This left a balance of $584,700 of stock still to be purchased, besides the $600,000 building bonds.

21. Q. Had only $15,300 been raised?

A. Up to the convention of 1897, $205,282.76 had been raised almost wholly by White-Ribbon women.

22. Q. What has been done with this amount?

A. It has been expended for interest, office and traveling expenses, printing and premiums, the finishing of Willard Hall and a room on the roof, etc.

23. Q. Upon what has interest been paid?

A Upon the $300,000 Temple trust bonds and upon the money borrowed to meet the interest upon these bonds.

24. Q. Are the Temple trust bonds different from the Building Bonds?

A. Yes. They are $300,000 bonds issued by Mrs. Matilda B. Carse.

25. Q. Why were they issued?

A. In order to enable the originator of the plan to buy up stock.

26. Q. Did the National W. C. T. U. order or authorize the issuing of these Temple trust bonds?

A. It did not. They were issued solely upon the individual responsibitity of Mrs. Carse, President of the Board of Temple Trustees. Miss Willard, though asked to give her permission to the plan, declined to do so.

27. Q. Were not the Temple trust bonds endorsed at the subsequent National Convention?

A. No vote of endorsement was passed by the convention, but the post-Executive Committee meeting of the Boston convention, in 1891, passed a resolution pledging co-operation in selling the Temple trust bonds.

28. Q. What was done with the $300,000 received from the sale of these bonds?

A. Temple stock to the amount of $250,000 was purchased, which stock, together with $50,000 of that which had already been purchased with money donated is now held by the American Trust and Savings Bank as security for the payment of the $300,000 Temple trust bonds.

29. Q. Then, before that amount of stock could belong to the Temple Trustees, the Temple trust bonds must be retired?

A. Most assuredly.

30. Q. What has been the expense of issuing the Temple trust bonds?

A. $164,782.13, itemized as follows:

Interest on bonds (paid out of gift fund) . .	$64,157.50
Interest on bonds (paid out of money received from sale of bonds)	16,878.00
Stock already purchased	50,000.00
Banker's commission for selling bonds . . .	7,500.00
Expense of selling bonds	2,582.04
Interest paid on stock which was bought with the bond money	23,664.59
Actual expense of issuing the $300,000 Temple trust bonds	$164,782.13

31. Q. What is the exact meaning of the phrase "Stock already purchased," as used above?

A. Sixty-five thousand dollars of stock had already been purchased by the Gift-fund sent in by White-Ribbon women; $50,000 of this was put up as part of the collateral for the Temple trust bonds and must be bought back before it can be the property of the W. C. T. U.

32. Q. How large an amount is now available (November 14, 1898) for the retiring of the bonds?

A. Much less than $200,000.

33. Q. Is this amount in cash, ready at hand for the retiring of the bonds?

A. A part of it is in conditional pledges. Nearly $100,000 of the amount is in reductions from face value of the Temple trust bonds or in gifts to the Temple Trustees of the bonds themselves.

34. Q. What is the Board of Temple Trustees?

A. It is an incorporated body of White-Ribbon women, selected originally by Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the President, and is self-perpetuating. It was incorporated to receive gifts for the purchase of the Temple.

35. Q. Why is the Woman's Christian Temperance Union urged to raise money to retire the Temple trust bonds?

A. It is claimed that, since the bonds were issued "on behalf of the W. C. T. U.," there is a moral obligation resting upon the society for their retirement.

36. Q. Does the society, through its official representatives, acknowledge this moral obligation?

A. It does not.

37. Q. Would the retirement of the Temple trust bonds give the Temple Trustees a controlling interest in the Temple?

A. It would not, because there is a contract with Mr. Marshall Field that, before he will release the controlling interest, there must be purchased from him, at par value, a block of stock amounting to $118,400, after the $300,000 shall have been raised to retire the Temple trust bonds, and it is from this stock he has long promised a gift of $50,000.

38. Q. Are the Temple trust bonds redeemable in Temple stock?

A. They are. The bonds may be exchanged for the stock held as security at any time.

39. Q. If the possession of Temple stock would be a benefit to the National W. C. T. U., why should it not be considered a fair exchange for the individual bondholder to take stock for his bond?

A. We fail to see why it would not be.

40. Q. Has it ever been assumed that the organization is responsible for the debts of the other affiliated interests—the Hospital and the W. T. P. A.?

A. It has not, and yet they occupy the same relation to the National as the Temple.

41. Q. If, in ten years, it cost, in round numbers, $200,000 to secure $15,000 of stock, how long would it take, at the same ratio, to retire the $300,000 Temple trust bonds, and how much money would it cost?

A. At the same ratio it would take 200 years, and would cost $4,000,000.

42. Q. How long would it take to purchase the entire amount of stock ($600,000) at par value, and what would it cost?

A. Four hundred years and $8,000,000.

43. Q. How long to retire, in addition, the building bonds, and what would it cost?

A. At the same ratio it would take 800 years and it would cost $16,000,000.

44. Q. Has the Temple been a paying investment?

A. It has not. There has been a deficit in the running expenses for three years.

45. Q. Why is there a discrepancy between the estimated and the real rental of the building?

A. Because a large part of the building has never been occupied, and rentals have fallen one-half.

46. Q. How is this fact accounted for?

A. Since the date of opening the Temple, May 1, 1892, twenty-seven new office buildings have been opened in the business district of Chicago, with an aggregate of about 5,500 offices.

47. Q. What was the amount claimed by the founder of the Temple enterprise that would accrue as revenue to the National W. C. T. U. from the rentals of the Temple?

A. In her address before the Nashville Convention, the President of the Temple trustees said: "Then the National would have $200,000 yearly to spend in pushing its different lines of work." In her report before the convention held in New York city, she said: "When the building is all paid for and running expenses deducted, a net income of 20 per cent on $500,000 will be realized from the rentals."

48. Q. Was this estimate based on present rate of rentals or on the original rate?

A. Upon the original rate, and also upon the supposition that every square foot of space in the building would be rented at that figure.

49. Q. Is it at all likely that rentals will ever again reach the point in Chicago that they occupied when the Temple was built?

A. It is not probable.

50. Q. Then if the Temple became the property of the National W. C. T. U., would its ownership advance the work of the organization as its founder hoped?

A. At its present rate it would put the National in debt $15,000 or more per year.

51. Q. What of the work carried on in Willard Hall?

A. A good work is carried on in Willard Hall, by the Chicago Central union, which pays a rental of $1,200 yearly.

52. Q. If the Temple enterprise were abandoned would the work of Willard Hall cease?

A. Willard Hall could still be leased; or if not, the work could be carried on elsewhere. It is probable that the memorial tablets could be removed to another center of Gospel Temperance work.

53. Q. If the Temple enterprise were abandoned is there danger that Willard Hall would be turned into a beer tunnel?

A. Absolutely no danger. A clause in the lease provides that liquor cannot be sold upon the premises.

54. Q. Does a debt of $1,000,000 really rest upon the Temple?

A. It would take that much, in addition to what the Temple trustees already have, to pay in full for the building, but the National is in no way obligated to buy the Temple.

55. Q. If the enterprise were abandoned what would become of the building?

A. It would become the property of Mr. Marshall Field in name as it already is in fact.

DECEMBER 10, 1898.

The foregoing questions and answers were printed for the National W. C. T. U. Convention at St. Paul, Minnesota. They have been slightly abridged and a second edition of the printed leaflet appears in answer to a demand for information about the Temple.

Since the first edition was issued, the Temple has been discontinued as an affiliated interest by a vote of 285 to 71, and the National W. C. T. U. has declared itself as in no way obligated either to purchase the Temple or to pay off the Temple Trust Bonds. The full discussion upon this subject can be found in the report of Monday and Tuesday afternoons of the St. Paul Convention, in The Union Signals of Dec. 1 and 8, 1898. It will be noted that these questions and answers are based almost entirely on the results of the first ten years of Temple work, the report of the eleventh year not having appeared at the time they were prepared. The report of the eleventh year was, however, presented to the St. Paul Convention before the action was taken which discontinued the Temple as an affiliated interest; but it did not furnish any basis for a reasonable hope that the Temple would ever become the property of our organization or that its ownership would be advantageous.

The Temple Trustees' report, relating to the Temple Trust Bonds, as given at St. Paul, was as follows:

Temple Trust Bonds donated, and Bonds purchased by Temple Trustees	$ 27,800
Subscribed by bondholders	81,000
Other cash subscriptions	30,700
Temple Trustees, cash	12,000
Miss Dow, custodian (approximate)	22,000
Total	$173,500

"Subscribed by bondholders, $81,000" was secured from the holders of the $300,000 Temple trust bonds by the Temple trustees informing them that no more interest could be paid and that the interest already received by them amounting to 30 per cent, would be deducted from the face of their bonds, thus offering them 70 cents on the dollar. "Other cash subscriptions, $30,700," is counted the same as cash in hand, but 10 per cent is all that could reasonably be expected to be realized from such subscriptions. "Miss Dow, custodian (approximate) $22,000" is dependent on conditions which have not been met, and is subject to the order of the donors.

This leaves two items in the report, with $9,600 of stock mentioned elsewhere in the report, to represent the actual assets of the Temple trustees after eleven years of effort. They are: "Temple trust bonds donated and bonds purchased by Temple trustees, $27,800," and "Temple trustees, cash, $12,000," which with stock $9,600, make $49,400. Everything else which has been brought forward at any time in favor of the ownership of the Temple aside from the demand upon the holders of the Temple trust bonds as above, is either conditional or purely speculative.

The new offer of Mr. Marshall Field, announced at St. Paul, to give $50,000 in cash and $50,000 in stock, is conditioned upon the $300,000 Temple Trust Bonds being first redeemed, and then the cash promised by him is to pay interest already accrued on the $600,000 Building Bonds and to reduce the floating debt, neither of which items have been counted by us in estimating the amount of money necessary to purchase the Temple and both of which fall to Mr. Field to provide for, as the largest owner in the Temple. This makes his gift the same as his previous offer of $50,000 in stock, with the exception that he now stipulates that the Temple Trustees shall not have the control of any part of the stock or building until the entire amount is paid, including the $600,000 Building Bonds. At the rate of progress made in eleven years, the ground lease would have expired long before this could be accomplished. The $600,000 Building Bonds being the first mortgage upon the Temple, it is certain that they can never be bought for less than par, as the holders have themselves asserted. The contract with Mr. Field is to pay him par for his $118,400 of stock. These and many other considerations, including the facts that such a building could be erected to-day for $800,000; that if we now had the controlling interest in the Temple, it would be running us into debt at the rate of $15,000 or $20,000 per year; and especially the fact that only 7½ per cent of the money donated to buy the Temple has gone for that purpose, while 92½ per cent has been eaten up by expense, convinced all who investigated the subject that the case was entirely hopeless, and that there was nothing left for the National W. C. T. U. to do but to abandon all affiliation with the enterprise. Even if all these bad conditions had not been found to exist it would still be sufficient for all loyal white-ribboners to know that Miss Willard left on record these words: "If by the termination of this year, November 1, 1898, we cannot raise the $300,000, I believe we should disassociate ourselves from this enterprise as an affiliated interest."

World's Gen. Sec.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, 126 W. 103d St., New York City.

Nat. Gen. Sec.—Miss Clara Parrish, Paris, Ill.

Acting Secretary.—Mrs. Ella A. Boole, West New Brighton, New York.

Associates.—Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, New York City; Miss Ida C. Clothier, Manitou, Col.; Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.; Miss Frances H. Ensign, Madison, O.; Miss Carrie Lee Carter, Dexter, Mo.; Miss Caroline M. Caswell, 378 Ferry St., Malden, Mass.

A Letter From Mrs. Boole.

DEAR YOUNG WOMEN:—The National Convention is over, and I know you are all rejoiced that Clara Parrish is the new general secretary of the Young Woman's Branch. She has endeared herself to the young women all over the world, and you will all be ready to give her a joyous welcome to her "ain countree." We hope that she will return in four or five months; in the meantime, by request of the executive committee, I will continue the work. Let us cheer the heart of Miss Parrish by being able to turn the work over to her in a condition of growth and increased interest along every line.

It is nearing the Christmas season, and you are all thinking about Christmas presents for your friends. For some you will spend perhaps a large sum of money, and I want to ask if you will not each remember the work Clara Parrish is doing and make a cash present from each Y. W. C. T. U., that shall be equivalent to five cents for every active and honorary member? Surely, while thousands of dollars will be spent in giving presents to the ones we love, we can each at this happy Christmas time spare five cents or more for the work we love. I hereby appoint every local Y president a committee of one, to collect five cents or more, as a Christmas offering, from every member of her society, active and honorary, which she will send at once, by December 25, if possible, to the state custodian of the Clara Parrish Fund, or, in case you have no state custodian, to the state Y secretary, who will forward the same, through state treasurers, to Mrs. Mary Campbell Wells, Erie, Ill.

At the World's Convention in Toronto, it was decided to have a World's Y Banner, and the securing funds and designing the banner was placed in the hands of the British Y's. The banner will cost about fifty dollars, and at the Y conferences in St. Paul, it was voted "that inasmuch as we want each Y. W. C. T. U. in the country to have a part in the banner, each state Y secretary be instructed to collect a sum equal to five cents, for each Y union in the state, for the World's Y banner."

Now, if when you are collecting the Clara Parrish Christmas fund you will add five cents for your union for the World's Y banner, and send it to the custodian or state Y secretary and designate that five cents is for that purpose, it will save additional writing and postage. These amounts seem insignificant, but if every one does her part the aggregate will be a great help to the work.

Miss Parrish has voluntarily relinquished her appropriation from the World's W. C. T. U., and we all want to make it as easy and comfortable for her these last days as we can.

The Annual Leaflet of the Y's will not be issued until January. In the meantime I have some of the issue of '97 and '98, which I will be glad to send for the postage.

The Y column in THE UNION SIGNAL is what we make it. Will not state Y secretaries be particular to send letters each quarter, giving items of interest about the work in their states? Reports of Y conferences, Y hours at county conventions, any special work undertaken by the Y's will be acceptable. Do not feel that the work is too little to be reported. It may encourage others. I will be glad to have you send me copies of any specially good papers prepared for conferences and conventions, with programs of the same, or of successful socials, entertainments or evangelistic meetings.

We begin the new year with bright prospects. May the blessing of God attend every effort for increasing the usefulness of young women.

Yours faithfully,

ELLA A. BOOLE.

Annual Report of the General Secretary of the Young Woman's Branch of the National W. C. T. U., November 12, 1898.

EVERY argument that can be presented for the organization of a Woman's Christian Temperance Union applies with equal force to the organization of a Y. There is need of a society which will develop young women for leadership in religious and philanthropic work. Unless the responsibility for the organization is thrown upon the young women, they will not take it.

While nominally young men and young women work together in the existing young people's societies in our churches upon an equality, they are not equal so long as no young woman has a place on the Central Council, or the Board of Control, and young women are not equally represented in the programs at state and National conventions. Young women have to-day equal educational advantages with young men and are equally well fitted for positions of responsibility and trust.

The Y. W. C. T. U. is a training school for reformers, the aim being to enlist young women and men in the army of total abstainers, that they may not only learn the mission of the "white ribbon," but may realize in their own lives, what the white ribbon means in the work for total abstinence, for purity and for equality.

It is something to stand in the advocacy of a good cause, when the tide is against you.

The revelations of college drinking and the deadly work of the canteen in the army, the fashionable and too prevalent habit of serving wine at social functions, the presence of the social vice, and the double standard of morality, the constant use of the cigar, the cigaret, and the odor of tobacco, make plain the fact that an organization that stands for total abstinence from liquors and tobacco, for purity, and a "white life for two" will not be the largest organization in the world, but will be an organization that shall train workers for God's vineyard.

We honor the men who fought at Manila, at San Juan Hill and Santiago, but we believe that equal honor belongs to the women and men who stand in the advocacy of a moral principle, even though all the world be against them.

The Y. W. C. T. U. is not a separate organization from the W. C. T. U. We call the members Y's for short, but they are a part of the W. C. T. U. They pay the same dues, they sign the same pledge, in some states adding the purity pledge and the pledge against tobacco, they pay the same auxiliary fees, they have the same departments of work, and while some departments are more adapted to Y work than others, in general the plan of work is the same.

Young women, with the superior qualifications gained by superior educational advantages, are equally well fitted to bear the responsibility of an organization with their mothers and older sisters.

Going aboard a warship not long ago, it was remarked that the navy was composed of very young men. The officers replied that "Young men made better soldiers than older ones; they were more agile, were quicker to see the situation, and more prompt in meeting emergencies."

In this woman's war against the liquor traffic, impurity, and every form of evil the young women are needed for service, that they, having the advantage of the instruction and experience of the W. C. T. U., may be the trained leaders of the future. They are needed not only for the work's sake, but for their own sake.

The churches expect to get the most of their recruits from the Sunday-school and the young people's societies; for this reason the churches encourage these lines of work, they believe in them. If the W. C. T. U. is to live and continue its work, it must not only encourage the L. T. L. and the Y Branches, but must do it in such a way that the W. C. T. U. will be continually gaining recruits from these two organizations.

The object, then, of Y work is to establish young women and young men in temperance principles, that they may become trained workers in the temperance reform. The methods employed are the organization of Y's wherever practicable, Y Branches where there is difficulty in obtaining officers or there are not sufficient members for a separate organization, or inviting young women to join the W. C. T. U.

It will be seen that some form of Y work is therefore adapted to every community. In addition to the methods of organization there are two other very important lines of work—temperance work in existing young people's societies and temperance work in schools and colleges.

I would that we might reach every young man and every young woman in every college in the land, and impress upon them the scientific facts that the evil effects that follow in the train of liquor and tobacco are the results of the nature of the drink and of the tobacco and not of the weakness of the drinker or the user. That in order to be strong in mind and body total abstinence is essential; that the Temperance Insurance Society of England, by statistical tables, the results of fifty years experience in life insurance, shows that the average life of the total abstainer is nine years longer than that of the moderate drinker.

An attempt has been made to reach many schools and colleges, and we rejoice in the organization of many Somerset Y's, and in many addresses before schools and colleges. At Foltz Mission Institute, a training school for mission workers in the home and foreign field (Herkimer, N. Y.) they have a regular course in W. C. T. U. methods. The library contains all the literature of our departments for reference, kindly furnished by our National superintendents of departments.

In the common sorrow over the death of our great leader, the Y's have shared, and many a young woman will be a nobler, truer woman because her life touched Frances Willard's. As a little token of love and tribute, the floral offering from the Y's at her funeral was a branch of ivy leaves and lilies of the valley, tied with "ribbon white," and with it went the prayer, that God would continue to bless the young womanhood of the world through the knowledge of the life of our beloved Chieftain.

A loving testimonial to the service of Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, who stood at the head of the Y Branch for so many years, consisted in framed resolutions, beautifully engrossed, with the Y emblem painted on the border and a purse of money to be used for the World's Y work.

While it is a pleasure to pay tribute to those who go and those who stay, the Y Branch has not been silent in the presence of the evils of the day. A protest was sent to the owners of Princeton Inn against the sale of liquor to students, and another to the authorities of Yale, urging that students be prohibited from entering places where liquors were sold, and that the use of liquors at college banquets be forbidden.

Letters were sent President McKinley, Secretary Alger and Secretary Long, asking that the canteen be prohibited in the interest of the discipline and health of the army. That none of these protests or requests were granted, must not discourage us. We are commanded, "Be not weary in well doing, for in due season ye shall reap if ye faint not."

Two thousand copies of the Plan of Work were printed, eight articles written for THE UNION SIGNAL, eighteen for state papers and special editions, two for college papers, hundreds of letters, and thousands of pages of literature have been sent out from Y headquarters. Addresses before Christian Endeavor Societies, Epworth Leagues and Good Templars, talks at forts and on warships, lectures and parlor meetings for Y's, with the presentation of Y work at schools and colleges and Y conferences at county and state conventions, are a partial record of the work of your secretary and her assistant this past year.

Two new leaflets have been issued—"Is there need of a Y?" and "A Y Catechism."

What shall I say of the state secretaries? The young women who have carried the burden of the work in their own states, sometimes with little or no appropriation, and with little sympathy or help from some of the W's. Eternity alone will reveal results, but I do know much faithful effort has been put forth and much good seed sown. Some states have appointed secretaries for the first time this year, and we are glad to welcome Texas and Utah. Other states have had new secretaries, and Illinois, we are rejoiced to report, has again adopted the department.

In the twenty-eight states reporting we have 616 Y's, 125 of which were organized this year,

NOW comes the season when dainty and delicious cake and pastry are required. Royal Baking Powder is indispensable in their preparation.

For finest food I can use none but Royal.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

with a total paid membership of 8,833 active and 2,494 honoraries. This does not include the membership of the Young People's Christian Temperance Union of Chicago, because it is not an auxiliary society. The Y work is continually changing because the young women are going away to school and college, marrying, and, sad as it may seem, growing old, old enough to be merged into W's, so that when I report an increase in paid membership of 937 it means an increase over the losses which are inevitable. Eight states only report a decrease in membership, but in a number of these many new members have been gained. In every state the work reported is in no sense commensurate with the work done.

I wish I had time to tell of the special lines of work, of the noble stand for a righteous cause, of Willard Y settlement in Boston, of the Y tea room in Providence, of the faithful band of young women who without noise of trumpets or blare of bugles have stood, but we are glad that He knows,

That He sees it all through
What they ought to have done,
And what they did do,
And unto each Y that's been faithful and true,
God's blessing has come, for He's faithful and true.

With the popularity of young people's societies on every hand, with the simple requisites for membership in many of them, with the laxity of organization and the multiplicity of meetings of every sort, does it not take courage and faith to push an organization that requires of each member the signing of the total abstinence pledge, the payment of specified dues each year, and implied opposition to every form of evil? It does, but "with trust in God and firmness in the right," the Y. W. C. T. U. has flung its banner to the breeze, and loyal to the W. C. T. U. and every department of work, it shall continue to stand believing that "the joy of life is doing good according to a plan."

OUR annual convention was held in September at Gawler, a very pretty town about twenty-five miles north of Adelaide. This was quite a new departure, as nine Colonial conventions have been held in the city, and the suggestion to hold one elsewhere at first sounded rather infeasible, as the fear was that those managing the matter might find themselves seriously hampered by difficulties, especially in securing homes for a considerable delegation. Our cities are not of such colossal proportions, nor our largest towns of such capacity as those in either Old England or America. However, the gratifying results have justified the faith of our Gawler sisters and we had a very good time.

On the Sunday preceding the convention the pulpits of the various nonconformist churches were courteously opened to members of the convention, some of whom accepted the invitation and conducted the services. Among these were Mesdames Edwards, Whiting, Shearing, Howe, Pudney and Miss George. On Monday night the delegates' reception was emphatically successful. The hall was thronged and fraternal greetings rained thick and fast from representatives of nearly every organization in the town. We humbly hope the convention has left its impress on the beautiful town whose residents received us with graceful courtesy and made us free of their pleasant homes with evident heartiness. The churches and the local press afforded us the completest accommodation and reporting in their power, while the local musical talent, of which Gawler has an unusually large share, responded most liberally to our appeals for their assistance.

Many temptations offered in the way of charming, clandestine skips into the adjacent country which looked delightfully attractive in its bowery spring finery; but we had a live conscience among us, and for the most part stuck to the program like Trojans. Mrs. Lyall was unanimously re-elected as president, the two secretaries were also re-elected, and Mrs. Button was placed in the treasurer's office, which was vacant on account of the marriage of our late treasurer. A vast amount of information of an important nature was conveyed to us by means of department reports, of which we have now thirty-seven. But educative as were the various functions of the convention, we by no means exhausted our store while at Gawler. On the birthday of our beloved, promoted and surely, more than ever living leader, we held a World's missionary all-day meeting at headquarters, when different spheres and the work done in them were spoken upon by members of the union. The meetings were very enjoyable, awakening interest, and affording enlightenment on the subject. Mrs. Mitchell was appointed superintendent of this department during convention.

Many of our sisters are developing a wholesome desire for instruction, and we contemplate a series of superintendents' conferences in order to supply the want. At a preliminary meeting our convention plan of work was discussed, and resolutions were passed in favor of higher qualification for the work. We want to get ready some reform leaven with which to permeate the "whole lump" of society during the general elections in April next. Government has made strenuous and praiseworthy efforts to have every elector's claim recognized and to guard against informalities. Doubtless there will be a stiff party struggle, for place is a fulcrum for power, and capital and labor still pose as mutually irreconcilable. The worst of it is the demoralization of a large number of votes by the overflow of the beer-taps, more especially on election day. The early closing and other important bills are occupying our legislators, and evoking some newspaper controversy just now, and we are often reminded by our critics that we have no business with politics. We answer that while politics interfere with or menace our rights and ignore or neglect our best interests and our just claims, our attitude is inevitable and justifiable.

Our much-missed Australasian president is out of the colony doing excellent service for the cause. Reports of her work are to hand in the current issue of Our Federation, where, also, we are so glad to see side by side the likenesses of our own A. L. A. Murcutt and our dear honorary Australasian president, Miss Ackermann, and to read some intelligence of their whereabouts and work. We think about you at your twenty-fifth National Convention and the withdrawn presence of her who was the very genius of such gatherings in the past, and pray that you may be specially guided and upheld. May our Father grant you sweet and surprising tokens of His compensating power.

With loving loyalty to her memory and your cause,

Missouri.

THE state convention in Poplar Bluff, October 21–25, was one of the very best ever held in the state. Large banners of welcome were stretched across the streets; merchants decorated their stores; flags, banners, and mottoes of welcome were everywhere.

Friday morning and afternoon was devoted to executive meetings, and the superintendents also had a splendid meeting that day. All the general officers, twenty vice-presidents and the editor of the Counselor were present at the executive meeting.

The opening session of the convention was held Friday night in the Opera House, which was gaily decorated with flags, plants, banners, and a beautiful picture of Miss Willard. The music furnished was under the leadership of Prof. Parsons, and it elicited much praise from all. The convention was welcomed in behalf of the city, churches, school, legal fraternity, medical fraternity, southwest Missouri and the local union. Mrs. May L. Woods responded to the welcomes in her bright way. This was followed by a reception tendered to the officers and delegates by Mrs. Kelly in the Odd Fellows' hall. Dainty refreshments were served, lovely music was given by the mandolin club, and all together made a most delightful meeting.

At the opening session on Saturday morning the officers responded to roll-call with a quotation from the writings of Miss Willard, and nearly all delegates responded to the same, which made a very impressive service.

The corresponding secretary, Miss Ellen Morris, gave a splendid report and from it we learn our state has had sixty new unions organized this year, making in all 366, with 3,141 members. Have sixty-five active L. T. L's, with 2,565 members. The seventeenth district was the banner district in membership. Chilhowee the banner local union for new members.

Saturday evening the convention was presided over by Mrs. Ingalls, our beloved vice-president and also National superintendent of narcotics. Mrs. Clara Hoffman, state president, then delivered her annual address, which was one of her very best, and was broad in scope, comprehensive and masterly. Mrs. Hoffman has the love of all her "children" in the state and they are praying earnestly that she will be spared for years in the work she loves so well.

On Sunday the pulpits of the four churches were filled morning and evening by the state organizers. In the afternoon Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, of Kentucky, made a special address. She won all hearts.

Monday morning an impressive memorial service was conducted by Mrs. Hoffman. All the superintendents sent in good reports which show that much work has been done. The vice-presidents, lecturers and organizers told of their work, which has been one of the busiest years they ever had.

On Monday night a gold medal contest was held, many prominent workers of the state taking part. The medal was awarded to Mrs. Nelle Burger. Miss Ellen Morris, state superintendent of contests, then presented a beautiful banner to the fourth district, for having held the most contests. They had forty-five contests reported. The banner was received by Mrs. Lura Hyden-Boleyn, president of that district.

Tuesday was a busy day, and in the evening a splendid meeting was held, when a large number of our bright speakers were on the platform. State Y secretary, Mrs. Nelle Burger, presided in a charming manner. After the meeting was dismissed she organized a Y union.

The Thirtieth District presented each member of the convention with a bunch of cotton tied with white ribbon as a souvenir. The cotton was sent by Mrs. Carter (mother of Carrie Lee Carter), who also sent some roses for the convention.

The Poplar Bluff citizens treated the delegates to a drive over the city on Tuesday afternoon. They also presented each one with a souvenir booklet of views of Poplar Bluff.

Mrs. Anna Dunning and Mrs. Lura Hyden-Boleyn were made organizers for the year.

Mrs. Clara Hoffman was unanimously re-elected president. When her election was announced the delegates arose and sang, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

The following officers were also unanimously re-elected: Vice-president, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls; corresponding secretary, Miss Ellen D. Morris; recording secretary, Mrs. Kate Newton; treasurer, Mrs. Julia Glazier.

Much of the success of the convention was due to the work done by Miss Carrie Lee Carter and Mrs. Cora D. Hammett.

Connecticut.

THE Methodist church of Torrington, in which was held, October 12–14, the twenty-third annual convention of the Connecticut Woman's Christian Temperance Union, was tastefully decorated for the occasion with flags and banners, while about the platform were grouped cut flowers and potted plants. In front of the platform was a large portrait of Miss Willard.

After the opening devotional exercises, conducted by the state president, came the roll-call of officers and superintendents, responded to by quotations from Miss Willard's writings. This was a beautiful and helpful part of the service.

The "superintendents' hour" commenced at 2:55 P. M. Each superintendent was given three minutes in which to report her department. Reports were read from eight departments, as follows: Temperance literature, prison and jail work, parlor meetings, evangelistic, state and county fairs, press, Sunday-school, UNION SIGNAL. Then came the county presidents' hour, which showed an encouraging advance since last year. A vote was passed, authorizing the corresponding secretary to wire a message of sympathy to Mrs. C. S. Barnum, who was ill at her home. The exercises were interspersed with music.

The children's meeting at four o'clock was conducted by the state superintendent, with over one hundred children present. A teacher in a public school had taught the children songs and recitations, with which they entertained the guests, after which the superintendent gave a helpful talk to the little ones.

The enthusiasm shown at the evening service was all that usually characterizes a great gathering with inspired motive. After the addresses of welcome and the response, tenderly given by Mrs. C. B. Buell, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, who scarcely needed an introduction in her home county, gave her address on the "New Page in Our History." She spoke for over an hour. Her address was brilliant and advanced many original thoughts.

Wednesday morning there was a consecration service, conducted by the evangelistic superintendent. There were brief prayers and earnest testimony of personal experiences. A local reporter pays the following tribute: "One could but believe that such faithful lives as these must succeed in their purpose, in spite of all obstacles."

At the close of this service the editor of the White-Ribbon Banner gave her report, and forcibly urged the convention to a loyal support of the official organ. After one or two committee reports came another superintendents' hour, when reports were read by the superintendents of purity, narcotics, franchise, Loyal Legion and scientific temperance instruction. Then Mrs. Hunt explained some of the methods of conducting scientific temperance instruction work.

The reports of corresponding secretary, treasurer and auditors were read, accepted, and showed a gratifying condition of the organization. At noon fraternal delegates, visitors and presidents of new unions were introduced and many pleasant acquaintances were made.

At the memorial service in the afternoon the leader dwelt on Pilgrim's arrival at the City Gate, from which she drew the thought that heaven is dearer for the presence of our loved ones. Then one who had been personally acquainted with Miss Willard related some memories of her, especially considering her intellectual stature. Then the list of "promoted comrades" in the state was read, numbering thirty-two.

After singing and reading the minutes of the morning session came the reading of the president's annual address, full of tenderness and earnest purpose, helpful and stimulating. The appointment of delegates to the National Convention followed.

From four to five o'clock was Y hour. After earnest prayer the reports of the counties were read. A letter from Clara Parrish, written on parchment three yards in length, was read and listened to with interest. Mrs. Barnes addressed the meeting most helpfully. In closing she referred to her last meeting with Miss Willard. After a charming solo the meeting adjourned.

John G. Woolley was the speaker of the evening. The church was crowded to its utmost capacity with men and women who came with expectations high, and were not disappointed. Mr. Woolley used the strongest arguments, and drove them home with tremendous force.

Following was the singing of county songs, a feature of much interest. The county banner presented for greatest per cent gain in membership was awarded to Windham county, which had made a gain of seven per cent.

Friday morning the convention was called to order at 9:35. After the opening exercises the report of the executive committee advised that each union contribute one dollar to the entertaining union and one dollar to the support of the state paper.

The balloting resulted in the re-election of all the officers who had served the previous year. In the case of the president, Mrs. C. B. Forbes, who has held the office for sixteen years, there was a demonstration of joy as the result was announced. Former superintendents were reappointed except in the departments of unfermented wine and state and county fairs, which were dispensed with.

The report of the committee on resolutions was brought in. The most important resolution was that the statement of the National Officers concerning the Temple be considered authoritative, which was adopted. A resolution was passed extending thanks to all who had helped to make the convention a success. The delegates left Torrington regretfully, for their welcome had been so cordial, the hospitality so generous, and the spirit of friendliness on the part of the hosts so great that each felt a desire to tarry in so delightful a place as this temporary home had proven. The convention will meet in Willimantic next year.

I have several interesting items from local unions, but I fear the length of this letter forbids their insertion here, and I trust their writers will be patient and wait for the December letter.

Oregon.

I HAVE great arrears to make up in my usual report. Having missed sight of my last one, I was always waiting (as I supposed) its publication before sending another.

State conventions take precedence of all, so I will begin on that theme. A very interesting and helpful one was held in Eugene, October 1. Eugene's best leading men bade it welcome. Ex-mayor McClung, President Chapman of the State University, Superintendent Resler among them. Of our own women, Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson, Mrs. L. H. Additon, Mrs. D. E. Hyde and Mrs. Louise Bishop made eloquent speeches. Our state president, Mrs. Narcissa White-Kinney, displayed her usual ability as chairman. Her address was world-wide in its allusions, and bright with the light of encouragement. Her evening address, "The secret of a successful life," made a deep impression on her crowded audience.

In consequence of the failure of the gold medal contest, through the non-arrival of some of the contestants, an "evening with Miss Willard" took its place. This followed an impressive memorial service which called out the tender regrets of our loved and lost Chieftain. A large armchair had been tastefully draped in white by Mrs. Nora Williams, who with Mrs. Rideout had carried out the unique decoration of the church by red, white and blue pledge cards signed by young fingers. Forty-two yards strung on white ribbon hung in graceful loops, an object lesson for Mrs. Williams' state department, the Sunday-school.

The largest enrollment of members was shown by Indian Union at Warren Springs, where they muster seventy-five in number. This showing retains for them the county banner

The business sessions of the convention were transacted in the usual methodical way. The corresponding secretary's report gave cause for encouragement and thankfulness. The work in many localities looks more prosperous than in years. The reported membership remains stationery, but many unions had failed to write. The superintendents' reports followed in regular order. That of capital and labor, by Mrs. Additon, called out an interesting discussion. The work among the sailors shows good results. With hearts warmed by the attentions shown them in port, many have signed the pledge. The gratitude evinced by some after many years gladdens the heart of the local Portland superintendent, Mrs. Dalgleish.

A large number of unions were working with a will against the deadly cigaret, proving how largely the mother heart is stirred on this question.

The financial condition of the state union is better than usual. Considerable work had been done on behalf of the Temple, for $300 had been collected. Mrs. A. R. Riggs' presence was greatly missed as representing our affiliated interests, the Refuge Home and the Northwestern White-ribboner. Mrs. Shane and Mrs. Spangler pleaded the cause of each.

The only change made among our state officers is that Mrs. S. S. Foster, corresponding secretary, was made vice-president at large, while Mrs. Henrietta Brown fills her place as corresponding secretary.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS.

A summer meeting was held for Lane county at Creswell, Mrs. Condon, president, in the chair. She afterwards tendered her resignation, feeling the work too much for her, and Mrs. Wilson was elected in her place. It seems to me that Lane county has done excellent work, reflecting great credit on the retiring president.

The only word that I have to pass on from the Marion county convention is of its ringing resolution, declaring its unflinching principles and its determination to work heartily to carry them out.

Of Yam Hill convention last month I have full accounts. Its president, the willing-hearted Mrs. Morris, of Newberg, retires, too, and Mrs. Groven, of McMinnville, takes her place. Hers had been the very hearty words of welcome. It is nothing new for good work to be accomplished in Yam Hill county, with the Newberg settlement of Friends in its midst.

This month (November) Douglas county held its annual meeting, with the inspiring presence of our state president, who spoke twice on the Sunday following to large audiences. Mrs. Lucy Owens' paper, "A Word for Our Boys," and Mrs. H. T. Hamlin's, on "Hygiene and Heredity," were both capable and useful.

Mrs. M. H. Jewett's place as retiring president was filled by Mrs. H. R. Ferguson, of Roseburg. In the way of entertainments a silver gray contest has been given at Brownsville, a youthful one at Dayton, and several at Roseburg. Mr. and Mrs. Rounds were entertained by the union of Monroe in honor of the fifteenth anniversary of their marriage. A lawn social with an excellent program was given by the Albina ladies, and a concert by Portland friends in aid of the Refuge Home. The ladies of Portland received an inspiring uplift from the visit of the Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, of Chicago, formerly their fellow citizen. In reviewing the temperance outlook of to-day, he emphasized its bright spots, and looked to see fulfilled in the future Miss Willard's prophecy that it would be no longer "good form" to be otherwise than a "total abstainer."

Of our state organizers, Mrs. Spangler has been able to do good work. Her visit to Linn county, where she held several days camp-meeting at Waterloo (a health resort with mineral springs). Great enthusiasm was evoked by Mrs. Spangler's own enthusiastic heartiness, and she left the little Waterloo union determined to "fight it out" in a place where the saloon element has held sway.

As a result of Miss Belle Kearney's visit in a former year, a day was devoted to temperance at the annual camp-meeting of the Christian church. All were delighted to welcome once more Elder I. W. Webb, formerly of Oregon, a veritable apostle of temperance, and a host in himself on any platform.

At the Florence Crittenton Refuge Home Mrs. Riggs is still well sustained in her untiring labors. The number of inmates is twenty, and ten babes in addition. The girls are encouraged to keep their babies if possible, but when they find they are unable to make a living for both them and themselves, Mrs. Riggs finds, without any difficulty, good homes for the little ones.

She has been saddened for the first time these eight years by deaths amongst her charges. Two of the girls have died in hospital during the month.

Away down in southern Oregon there is a flourishing band of Y's with an active, hard-working president, Mrs. A. R. Scott. They have bought a circulating library and a set of hymn books, buy and circulate four papers, have held numberless socials, gospel meetings and surprises for the children. The president has held 13 silver medal contests, two golden, and one gray, always encouraging the non-prize winners with awards. She has organized five L. T. L.'s, held seventy-five meetings and gained 150 Y members and taken in $118.45. In fact, this president of the Bandon Y's reminds me of the little poem appearing lately in our Northwestern White-ribboner:

"Nobody knows the pains it takes
To run things as they were meant;
Nobody knows how she works and prays,
Our faithful president."

Soldiers and Sailors.

DEAR COMRADES:—Money, delicacies, housewives or comfort bags are needed at once at Huntsville, Ala., and Savannah, Ga. Miss Elizabeth March, president of the W. C. T. U. at Huntsville, Ala., and Mary S. Allen Webb, president of the Savannah, Ga., W. C. T. U., will distribute what they receive. The need is great. We must not think that because the war has closed that no more of our work will be needed. We must go on and on, renew our efforts and help these brave women who are carrying our principles into the enemy's camp. The canteen in all its deadly work is still in our midst; all the power of the different organizations for good works has not been able to induce our President at the White House to banish it, so we must be faithful, do all we can to counteract its horrible work. Miss L. Chase, 40 I., N. W., Washington, D. C., still needs our help. Mrs. A. Burdick, 37 Clarkson St., New York city, can use comfort bags and other articles of clothing, also food.

The Sailors' Rest at Philadelphia, Pa., 1008 South Front St., auxiliary to my department, can dispose of thousands of comfort bags, also articles of clothing. Let us keep these all in mind and help wherever and whenever possible.

Money should be sent through treasurers' hands so that it will pass through National treasurer's hands to me, and it will be used where the need is the greatest.

Lovingly yours in comradeship,
ELLA M. THACHER,

Anti-Narcotics.

DEAR STATE SUPERINTENDENTS:—I hope every union in your state will begin at once to organize anti-cigaret or anti-tobacco leagues in the public schools. If you find it impossible to organize during school hours, then organize at some other time, but organize we must. Read what Fred W. Byers, Sergeant General of Wisconsin, says: "I regret to say numbers of our young men otherwise desirable, were rejected by the medical department of Wisconsin, for enlistment in the late war, because of defective nutrition and impaired or diseased nervous systems, due in most cases when investigated, to cigaret smoking." Surely it is time to enlist our boys in the anti-cigaret warfare, and I call upon all good people to help. Send two-cent stamp for constitution. Send petitions by the thousands to Congress in favor of the interstate commerce bill. This is a bill to regulate the cigaret trade in the states, allowing states to pass laws forbidding the sale, importation and manufacture of the cigaret. Have petitions signed by organizations and individuals. Send two-cent stamp for petitions and instructions.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

DEAR WHITE-RIBBON SISTERS:—While I have been writing to you for several years in THE UNION SIGNAL, it is still with some trepidation that I begin a letter for the Corresponding Secretary's column. It has been filled so successfully by my predecessor, Mrs. Stevenson, that I know you will miss the charm of her versatile pen and the easy, flowing style of her periods, and that is right. We want to remember one who served with such devotion but we will think of her, not as severed from the National work, but rather as one of the National vice-presidents, lending all of her splendid powers to the grand old state of Massachusetts, where we know she will be a moral Plymouth Rock and Bunker Hill monument of white-ribbon principles. You will note that she continues to be one of the contributing editors of THE UNION SIGNAL, so you will not miss her facile pen altogether.

As for myself, I do not feel that my constituency has changed so much but that it has only become a more personal relation. As soon as the pressing business following our National Convention is out of the way I shall study my field of enterprise—the United States, and the forces for its conquest diligently, and shall hope to contribute aid as to methods and plans of aggression. I must look to the organizers and other workers to put the threads of information into my hands that I may weave them into the waiting warp of our temperance loom.

Preparations are already under way for organizing and strengthening the work in the sparsely peopled districts of the west, as well as in the extreme southern states. We are sorry to record that some of our valued workers in the South cannot do organizing this year. Mrs. Sue Tomlinson Hollowell, of North Carolina, writes that she does not know when she can engage in active work again, but that her interest in the W. C. T. U. will ever remain the same. She is not to be entirely inactive, however, for she has been appointed the associate of Mrs. Ingalls in the anti-narcotic department. Some of you may know that Mrs. Hollowell has a family of children about her now, which occupies much of her time, and in which she takes very great pleasure.

Mrs. M. L. Welles, of Tennessee, will be remembered as doing most heroic work for the soldiers at Chattanooga last summer. Her health has long been feeble, but we are hoping that she may be strong enough to continue her local work, which we believe she will be for many years yet to come.

It is also worthy of note that Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi, has been elected a lecturer of the National W. C. T. U. She could not take up organizing work for the present year on account of some pressing literary work that she hopes to finish in that time. She will, however, as may be seen under the head "Where Our Speakers Are," be open to engagements after the middle of the year.

Our southern sisters may rest assured that their needs will be faithfully considered at National Headquarters. Miss Gordon has already gone to the southland for a short time, to look after the interests of the work, and she will be followed by others. Miss Gordon will return to Portland, Maine, in time to eat Christmas dinner with Mrs. Stevens. She has regained much of her old vigor, and rejoices her friends once more with her bright winsomeness.

I hope all white-ribboners will read carefully the page of greeting from the National officers, found in the last issue of THE UNION SIGNAL. It will give you the objective points for the year.

Owing to many questions constantly being sent in to Headquarters in regard to the Temple, it has been thought wise to give "Temple Questions Asked and Answered" a place in this issue. It is to be hoped that every white-ribboner will read and study them carefully that she may be fully persuaded in her own mind. Any one who wishes a copy in leaflet form can secure it by addressing Headquarters with a stamp.

Mrs. Stevens and Mrs. Hoffman are still here, Mrs. Hoffman editing the National Minutes, which will be out soon, and Mrs. Stevens dealing with a thousand plans and particulars in a masterly way which indicates the qualities of a fine general.

Hoping for most abundant success for all of our plans and purposes, I remain,

Yours cordially,

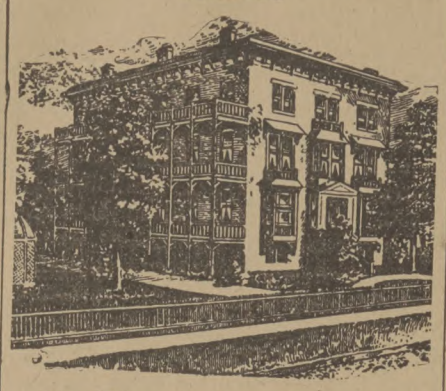
SUSANNA M. D. FRY.

Treasurer's Corner.

After the rush and extra work of the Harvest Home of our National at St. Paul, we begin to settle down to the regular routine of everyday work at Headquarters. Our hearts are full of thanksgiving for the blessings of the past year, for our excellent Convention and for the promise of renewed interest for the coming year. The long list of life and memorial members is very encouraging, and the timely gift of George Woodford of one thousand dollars just at the beginning of the new year is a great help.

The plan unanimously adopted at the Convention to make February 17, Miss Willard's heavenly birthday, a memorial day when every union is asked to hold a meeting, at which quotations of Miss Willard's remarkable gems of thought shall be given with fine music and addresses, was a happy thought. Collections are to be taken for the work and an especial effort should be made at these meetings to secure new members. Each union is asked to send two dollars to the National treasurer as a memorial fund to be used to build up our great work in honor of our departed, matchless leader.

The executive committee has laid plans broad and deep for more extensive work the coming year, in lengthening our lines and strengthening our stakes, and only the lack of means will prevent even a greater gain the coming year than we were able to report for the last. We are hoping that this memorial fund will be a permanent one, and that these many littles will become thousands, and will furnish abundant ammunition for our peaceful war.



The annual report and the new annual leaflets will be ready early in January, and all orders for these should be sent to me and not to the W. T. P. A. The minutes will be furnished for fifteen cents as usual; it costs about sixty cents a hundred to send the leaflets, and we make no charge for cost of printing.

Wisconsin was the first state to send in dues for the new year, while Iowa is first in sending L. T. L. dues.

We are looking for great gains this year. Let every woman consecrate herself anew for redoubled effort. May the glad Christmas time bring joy and peace to all our white-ribbon band.

HELEN M. BARKER.

Nat'l Temp. Hospital.

1619 Diversey Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Arrangements have been made with Miss Permelia Curtis Mahan, superintendent of physical culture for the state of Illinois, whereby she will give entertainments this year for the benefit of the Hospital. Her high testimonials and standing in this branch of our department work prove that the Hospital management is very fortunate in securing her services. I quote from Mrs. Amelia E. Sanford's recommendatory words: "Unions and societies cannot fail to be pleased with any entertainment she may present, and will secure amusement, instruction and inspiration at the same time." She further says: "Indeed, I have known of no failure in any work she has ever attempted." We trust that the friends of our temperance cause will give her liberal patronage. Many other recommendations of her ability and character lie before me, but sufficient has been given to insure for Miss Mahan the most enthusiastic support throughout the state of Illinois, where her efforts will doubtless be centered for the year.

The treasurer's report given December 5 for the last quarter showed the contributions from twenty-six states and eight territories; and from far-away Jamaica came a donation, not large, but telling of interest and a desire to be counted in. The quarterly reports were all encouraging, and in nearing the completion of this year of 1898, we see much to make us hopeful. We believe if our departed leader could talk to us to-day she would say as she did to Consul Booth-Tucker, "Just go straight on and all will be well." She was always so interested in this branch of the temperance movement, and, aside from the trustees, knew more of its aims than any one else. She believed in the Hospital and had confidence in its future usefulness. As a board we aim to do all she believed we would do to demonstrate the principles of total abstinence.

A letter came from St. Petersburg, Russia, inquiring what progress the W. C. T. U. of America had made in medical lines. We often receive letters from unions asking what we most need in the way of hospital supplies. In answer to such will say, that our bed linen supply is low, and we would be very grateful for white bedspreads, sheets 7/8 wide; pillow cases and tray cloths are always acceptable.

This is the week of the "holiday sale." Many packages have arrived and are still coming in each mail. We thank all who have aided in this way as well as in other donations of money and household supplies.

Continually looking forward to the future days of promise, we are,

Yours for service,

(MRS.) MARGARET INGLEHART.

Organizers' Corner.

DEAR ORGANIZERS: In haste I send you my letter for our Corner. I have truly been "on the wing" since our great feast at St. Paul. I enjoyed our convention so much, and I think I can enter upon the labors of a new year with better preparation and greater enthusiasm. In several places I have given the people some of the echoes of the convention, and they have all been greatly interested in the same.

My engagements for Eastern Washington demanded my leaving St. Paul immediately after the convention, so on Nov. 17 I turned my face toward my far-away western field. At Minneapolis, Mrs. Louisa P. Rounds, of Oregon, and Mrs. Lydia A. Irons, of Athol, Idaho, came aboard the train, so we had a very enjoyable trip together.

I reached the beautiful city of Spokane, Wash., on Saturday evening, November 19, and had a number of meetings there. Then I visited the following towns, where I held a number of meetings in each: Latah, Garfield, Colfax, North Yakima, and Ellensburg twice. I reorganized the union at Colfax, with seven active members, besides receiving into the other unions fifteen active and twelve honorary members. I feel very grateful to Mrs. Lucy R. Berry, who so ably planned my route in Eastern Washington. In some places I have found the sisters greatly discouraged, but still true and faithful, and I am thankful to say that I left them feeling more hopeful. It was a blessed privilege to meet with these faithful hearts endeavoring in this difficult field to hold up our banner. Although the woman suffrage amendment was defeated, I find the women ready to petition the legislature again the coming winter along the same line.

The glad news that the Convention of 1899 is to be in Seattle, is received with great interest by the people of Washington.

Trusting that each of our organizers may be permitted to report splendid work done during the coming year, I am,

Your loyal comrade,

MATTIE N. GRAVES,

Centralia, Wash.

Obituaries.

[Obituaries of six lines or less are published free. Longer notices will be inserted at the rate of ten cents per line. Death notices should be sent direct to the editors, not included in letters that go to the business office, and name of town and state should always be given.]

Died, at Attleboro, Mass., October 14, 1898, MRS. ISABEL FRINK, after an illness of three years. She was first to fill a mite box and card in the local union, and never lost her interest in it. Her life motto was "Scatter roses in the path of the living, the dead do not need it."

The local union at Mansfield, Ohio, is mourning the death of MRS. J. W. SHARP, who was an active worker in the Methodist Church, a faithful white-ribboner, and beloved by all. She was a crusader in Delavan, Ohio, in 1874.

CATARRH OF THE STOMACH.

A Pleasant, Simple, but Safe and Effectual Cure for It.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs, and difficult breathing; headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue, and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do, and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlandson the safest and best treatment is to use, after each meal, a tablet composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal, and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drug stores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthy appetite and thorough digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher, of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition, resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach, thus producing catarrh of the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure; but to-day I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I can not find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book mailed free on stomach troubles, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. The tablets can be found at all drug stores.

Dr. Mary Wood-Allen Receives a Letter.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 28, '98.

DEAR DR. WOOD-ALLEN:—Please find enclosed one dollar, subscription for the New Crusade.

I read the New Crusade every month with the greatest interest. I am the mother of six children, all under ten years of age, and I am spending my life teaching them how to live. I want them to glorify God in the use of all the gifts that He has trusted them with.

I find much that helps me in your paper. I realize that the training of a child embraces so much. The home influence, the food, the dress, the sleeping room, the reading, the playing, etc., etc. There is no end to it. I go on in close touch with the Good Shepherd, expecting to receive my reward in the holy and noble lives of my children by and by.

You are engaged in a grand work. Clean hearts, clean hands and clean lives for our children. I have learned much, I have still to learn. I tell others of the New Crusade, especially young mothers. I do not see how those mothers manage who have never looked into it at all. I have to be on the "lookout" all the time, danger is everywhere.

With prayer for your success,
Yours sincerely,
MRS. W. A. MCI.

Our Chieftain's Orders.

"Press On And On."

Mrs. Oberholtzer's beautiful memorial ode for Miss Willard, set to music by Mr. Hawley, is in wide demand for all W. C. T. U. public meetings. The words and music are inspiriting and effective and it will long be a standard memorial song. The ode is a solo with chorus, printed in sheet form, with a lovely half-tone of our Chieftain on the cover. Price ten cents per copy, four copies for thirty cents; one dozen copies furnished to state, county or local union for 60 cents. Slips of words without music, 10 cents per dozen. Address all orders to Mrs. S. L. Oberholtzer, 1905 Tioga St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Lost Money.

Again we call attention to the many complaints which reach us of the loss of money in the mails. Fifteen within a few weeks, the mailing clerk reports, and most urgently we request those favoring us with orders to send registered letters if impossible to secure money orders, which can be had at nearly all postoffices.

The trio of flashlight pictures taken at the St. Paul Convention are of special interest, the first being of the National Officers, the second of Mrs. Stevens, Mrs. Carse and Miss Gordon, the third of the group of children on the platform L. T. L. Evening. These were taken by Truman W. Ingersoll, 56 East Sixth St., St. Paul, Minn., to whom all orders must be sent. Price 50 cents each.

We are having many inquiries for Miss Willard's books for libraries, including "Glimpses of Fifty Years," $2.25; "Woman and Temperance," $2; "Young Woman Journalist," 75 cents; "Nineteen Beautiful Years," 60cents; "How to Win," $1; "Woman in the Pulpit," 50 cents; "A Classic Town," 75 cts.; "A Great Mother," $1.50; "How I Learned to Ride the Bicycle," 40 cents. We will furnish the entire set for this purpose for $7, freight not prepaid.

Wherever a W. C. T. union meets there should be some one of the many beautiful pictures of Miss Willard. The memorial etching, which is an exquisite work of art, can be secured for $2, the reproduction of the picture on the memorial number for 40 cents, the aquarelle picture for 35 cents. Would it not be a most fitting celebration of the Christmas season to place some one of these pictures in each union of National W. C. T. U.?

We have just received a consignment of the beautiful song, "On Heights of Power," words by Miss Willard and music by Lady Henry Somerset, from the English publishers. As the stock now on hand is not large, we would advise sending early for the same, price 35 cents per copy.

The edition of the beautiful Y Almanac for 1899 is now exhausted. We extend our thanks to all Y secretaries and friends who have assisted us in the sale of the almanac.

CHRISTMAS NUMBER

THE UNION SIGNAL

Fling it out to the breeze; let it tell to the world·
That the faith which has raised it will never surrender;
Let it tell that the love which our banner unfurled,
Is the guard of the home and the nation's defender.
Let it gleam as a star, for the shipwrecked afar,
Like a beacon that warns of the treacherous bar;
Let that banner of freedom and purity wave
As a signal of hope 'midst the perils we brave.

Publisher's Notes.

To the Local Unions:

As the new year draws near, and earnest temperance workers are making plans for the future, we do most urgently request that the local unions throughout the country will make a special New Year's offering to the work of the W. C. T. U. by sending in the names of five new subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL, thus making it possible for the paper to reach many poor women who do not feel able to take it, but who are members of the organization, and who, by being well informed, would become valuable and intelligent workers. Will not each local president give this subject prayerful consideration, and devise some practical and effective method for giving to these needy white-ribboners the pleasure of reading the official organ during the year 1899?

The British Temperance Advocate says, in a recent issue: "THE UNION SIGNAL is a paper that cannot fail to influence public opinion for righteousness. We wish every woman could read it." Is not the great and crying need for intelligent workers, and who can estimate the amount of good that can be accomplished by placing THE UNION SIGNAL in the hands of each member of the National W. C. T. U.? With cordial holiday greetings,

Yours sincerely,
CAROLINE F. GROW,
Business Manager.

The Frances Townsley Calendar for 1899 will be ready early in November. It is composed of a sentiment for each day in the coming year, the material being garnered at the request of friends from Rev. Miss Townsley's sermons, lectures, and addresses, with a few entire poems of the author published in such standard publications as The Youth's Companion, the New York Independent, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Baptist Standard, etc. Miss Townsley is a National evangelist of the W C. T. U. and at present is pastor of the Baptist church, of Vassar, Mich. The calendar is gotten up on neat paper with clear type, arranged for daily use, and the proceeds are to be devoted to Christian and reform work. There are many suggestions to young men and maidens; some to the aged, and not a few have felt that the preparation of this souvenir might be a means of real good to those who shall own a copy. It is expressly suitable as a Christmas gift. Price, single copy 75 cents; orders of eight or more at one time, 60 cents each. Address

"Purity's Greatest Foe," the address given by Miss Belle Mix, of Danville, Ia., before the National Purity Conference, and which was considered so remarkable that one thousand copies were at once ordered printed, is still attracting so much interest that a second and third thousand have been printed to meet the demand. Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, National evangelist, said of this address: "It would be impossible to do justice to the masterful, strong, yet chaste manner in which this subject has been presented."

Single copies of the address may be procured at three cents per copy; fifty or more at two cents each. Address Miss Belle Mix, Danville, Iowa.

RED-LETTER DAY.

CRUSADE DAY—December 23.

The anniversary of the going forth of the Crusaders at Hillsboro, O., 1873.

Notes and Comments.

THE many friends of our National president, Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, in Portland, Me., are arranging to give her a reception and banquet, to be held in the Congress Square Hotel, on the afternoon and evening of January 2, 1899.

SOME of the weekly journals are having a "Forefathers' number," commemorative of the landing of the pilgrims in December, 1620. This Christmas number of THE UNION SIGNAL, issued the day before the date of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the going forth of the first Crusade band in Hillsboro, O., may very properly be dedicated to our "four mothers"—Eliza J. Thompson, Eliza D. Stewart, Zerelda Wallace and Esther McNeill.

BUSINESS is lively at the National W. C. T. U. Headquarters these days. When the letter carrier came in yesterday morning he said as he began to deposit the great number of letters addressed to the National Officers and office force, "I am always glad to get here, for I get rid of most of my burden." That same afternoon when the mail was gathered up the postman said, "The National W. C. T. U. ought to buy me a horse," whereupon one of the bright girls in the office replied, "They might do it, as horses are cheap, nowadays."

WE doubt not that the twenty-fifth anniversary of the birth of the Crusade movement, December 23, will be widely observed by the local unions throughout the country. A look backward and a look forward is eminently fitting upon reaching this the quarter century milestone in our journeyings toward the goal—Christian temperance. And how inclusive a term that is we are only just beginning to realize!

WE know of white-ribboners who have placed THE UNION SIGNAL on their list of Christmas gifts to their friends. We hope there are many we do not know of who have done likewise. THE UNION SIGNAL also makes a fitting and acceptable New Year's gift to one's pastor or other friend—or to one's self. Indeed, every white-ribboner owes it to herself to provide for the weekly visits this coming year of what Miss Willard used to call the "letter from home."

THE brewers are going to petition Congress to take off the war tax of one dollar a barrel on beer. They so decided at their national convention. As they have been running Congress since 1862 it is quite likely they will succeed in getting what they want. The representative from Kentucky said that the brewers of that state obtained a written pledge from the candidates for Congress that they would work for the repeal of the tax. They are liberal enough to advocate the Brosins pure food and drink bill, which provides a federal standard of purity for all articles of food and drink.

THE Crusade Bible, in its handsome case presented by the National, was sent from Headquarters after the St. Paul Convention, to Hillsboro, O. It will be kept hereafter in the Crusade memorial room of the Presbyterian church recently erected upon the site of the old Crusade church. Speaking of this Bible reminds us that a most interesting souvenir was exhibited at the Convention by one of the orginal Crusaders, Mrs. Martin, of Pennsylvania, viz., a little hymn book, used by the crusading women of Ohio. Soiled and tattered and torn, it was one of the most eloquent of the "reminiscences" given at that meeting.

"FRANCES WILLARD glorified!" These words spring spontaneously to the lips of men and women as they stand before the beautiful crayon portrait of our departed leader in the reception room at National Headquarters. The picture in its frame is 40x44 inches, the dress is white, and from one side a white light streams full upon the uplifted head. This exquisite work of art is the gift to the National of the artist, Mrs. M. C. Pellette, of South Omaha, Neb., and during the Trans-Mississippi Exposition hung in the headquarters of the Nebraska building on the fair grounds. Mrs. Pellette never saw Miss Willard except as she lay in her casket, which makes the more remarkable this likeness which imparts to the beholder that desire to "be good" which the visible presence of our leader always inspired. The National officers, for white-ribboners everywhere, extend warmest thanks to Mrs. Pellette for her beautiful gift.

SECRETARY of the Treasury Gage, speaking in his report of the non-enforcement of the liquor law in Alaska, says: "It has been demonstrated that the sale of liquor in that territory cannot be effectually prohibited under present regulations by reason of the almost universal adverse public sentiment, and it would seem, therefore, the wiser course to confine it within such bounds as would insure its regulation by the government." This is tantamount to saying that if the laws which the federal government deems wise to enact do not meet the approval of a certain lawless class in our territories, such laws must be repealed and others made which will suit their less civilized notions. It reminds us of the mother whose seven-year-old son persisted in playing out doors despite the maternal command to "come in." She solved the problem of law-enforcement by saying, "Well, then, stay out; you've got to mind me, anyway." The question is, which is to govern in Alaska, Uncle Sam or the drink-sellers?

COMMENTING on the W. C. T. U. Convention at St. Paul, one newspaper says that even without the ballot women are wielding a telling power in the educational, economic and social world, and asks, "How does it happen that the number of white-ribboners is not even greater than it is?" There is no true woman, it continues, who does not, from the bottom of her heart, want her boy to be temperate, pure, healthy, manly—why is not, at least, every mother a member of the W. C. T. U.? And then it goes on to say that it is because we fight our battles in a mannish way! Now the public knows how W. C. T. U. women fight their battles, and how they settle their differences. Would any body of men, for instance, have met such a crisis as that involved in the Temple discussion at St. Paul in such a spirit as did the Woman's Christian Temperance Union? Would any deliberative body except an assembly of consecrated Christian women have met and passed through it with so much of self-control? One religious journal notes as "worthy of imitation in assemblies of men the unfailing patience and courtesy of these women." The Temple debate served to emphasize "woman's way," and especially Christian woman's way of doing things.

Peace Treaty Signed.

Work of the Commissioners at Paris concluded on December 10.

THE treaty of peace which closes the Hispano-American war was signed by the Spanish and American commissioners at Paris on December 10, the only concession made by the United States being the payment of $20,000,000 for the Philippines. The demands of Spain for some concession as to her colonial debts were firmly denied, as were also the suggestions that ecclesiastical property in the islands be treated with favorable discrimination. The Spanish commissioners signed the treaty in connection with a memorandum of protest which they hope to use at home for political effect. It now remains for the treaty to be ratified by Congress and the Spanish Cortez. The important conditions it imposes are as follows:

"Spain relinquishes all claims of sovereignty over and title to Cuba; and as the island is, upon its evacuation by Spain, to be occupied by the United States, the latter will, so long as such occupation shall last, assume and discharge the obligations in respect to protection of life and property which may, under international law, result from its occupation.

"Spain cedes to the United States the island of Porto Rico, and the other islands now under Spanish sovereignty in the West Indies, with Guam in the Mariana, or Ladrone, Islands. Spain cedes to the United States the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands.

"The United States will send back to Spain, at its own cost, the Spanish soldiers taken as prisoners of war on the capture of Manila by the American forces. The arms of the soldiers in question shall be restored to them. Spain will release all prisoners of war and all persons detained or imprisoned for political offenses in connection with the insurrection in Cuba and the Philippines and the war with the United States.

"On its part the United States will release all persons made prisoners of war by the American forces, and will undertake to obtain the release of all Spanish prisoners in the hands of the insurgents in Cuba and the Philippines.

"The United States will, at its own cost, return to Spain and the government of Spain will, at its own cost, return to the United States, Cuba, Porto Rico, or the Philippines, according to the situation of their respective homes, the prisoners released or caused to be released by them respectively under this provision.

"The United States and Spain mutually relinquish all claim for indemnity, national and individual, of every kind, of either government or of its citizens or subjects, against the other government that may have arisen since the beginning of the late insurrection in Cuba and prior to the exchange of ratifications of the present treaty, including all claims for indemnity for the cost of the war. The United States will adjudicate and settle the claims of its citizens against Spain, relinquished under this stipulation.

"The civil rights and political status of the native inhabitants of the territory hereby ceded to the United States shall be determined by Congress. The inhabitants of the territory over which Spain relinquishes or cedes her sovereignty shall be secured in the free exercise of their religion."

Reform Bills Pending in Present Session of Congress.

ON SENATE CALENDAR:—Hoar bill (S. 1187) prohibiting reproduction of prize fights by vitascope in the District of Columbia and the territories, and interstate transmission of such devices. (State and local laws to prohibit such exhibits will also be needed.)

Pritchard-Broderick bill (S. 2880, Report 524; H. R. 1136) to increase punishment for seduction of girls under twenty-one years in the District of Columbia. Has passed the house.

ON HOUSE CALENDAR: Hepburn bill (H. R. 1598) to prohibit the transmission by mail or interstate commerce of pictures or descriptions of prize fights.

Lodge-McAll bill (S. 112 H. R. 1) to exclude illiterate immigrants. Has passed Senate.

Ellis bill (H. R. 7937) to prohibit liquor selling in "canteens," government buildings, soldiers' homes, and immigrant stations.

Reported in House last Congress: Gillett Bill (H. R. 1170) to forbid interstate gambling by telegraph or telephone.

Favorably reported by District commissioners: McMillan-Harmer bill (S. 5920, H. R. 1075) to further protect the first day of the week in the District of Columbia.

Not reported as yet: Ray bill (H. R. 5184) to limit absolute divorce (with right to remarriage) to cases of adultery, in the District of Columbia and the territories; legal separation, without remarriage, being permitted for other causes. (Last Congress broke up "divorce colonies" in the territories; Ray bill is the next step toward uniform divorce law for the whole nation by constitutional amendment.)

Terry bill (H. R. 55) to protect state anti-cigaret laws, by providing that cigarets imported in original packages on entering any state shall become subject to its laws.

Civil service reform and Alaska prohibition are both in danger. Protests are needed.

A new bill to prohibit liquor selling in new, half-civilized colonies is to be introduced in December.

Reform News.

IT is announced at Pittsburg, Pa., that the Pittsburg and Lake Erie railroad management has issued a general order forbidding its employés to use liquor in any form, either on or off duty.

THE Chicago Citizens' League, through its efforts to suppress the sale of liquor to minors and drunkards, secured to the school fund during the month of November, $614.50 in fines and costs.

PRESIDENT ROGERS, of Northwestern University, at Evanston, Ill., submitted the following pledge to the members of the glee and mandolin clubs, the annual tour of the organization depending upon its being signed:

As a participant in a musical organization from the Northwestern University, I hereby promise that during all times when I am away from Evanston in connection with such organization I will refrain from all conduct which might injure or prejudice the good name of the university, and, particularly, that I will abstain from any use of alcoholic beverages at such times.

THE anti-cigaret law passed in 1897 by the Tennessee legislature is declared constitutional by a decision of the supreme court, which provides that the cigarets are not legitimate articles of commerce because they are noxious and deleterious to health, and do not therefore come under the federal provisions relative to commerce. It declares that on this account the state has the right to prohibit their importation and sale, and further declares that the conventional cigaret package is not an original package. This last is a knockout blow to the federal decision allowing the importation of the small packages as original packages. The sale of cigarets has already been stopped.

THE socialists of Haverhill, Mass., have elected a mayor, John C. Chase, and six members of the municipal legislature. This is the first time, so far as is known, that out-and-out and avowed socialism has won in an election of any importance in this country. Mr. Chase declares that he will carry out the policy of his party as defined in the platform on which he was elected, which demands that the city shall own and operate all public utilities requiring a franchise, the operatives to elect their own officers; that the city shall furnish food, shoes and clothing to children who are compelled to stay from school for want of these necessaries; that the city shall give employment to the unemployed on new public works; that taxation shall be equalized; that secret sessions of the council be abolished; the adoption of initiative, referendum and proportional representation, and other plans generally approved by socialists.

THE Prohibition Union of Christian Men of Rochester, New York, has closed its fall campaign under the most encouraging auspices. A series of sixteen mass-meetings have been held in the churches and halls of the city; other smaller meetings have been largely attended at the evening services of thirty-seven city churches; over $800 have been raised for advertising, expenses of speakers and literature, all for the purpose of bringing a wave of moral good to the city and its people. The union has been in existence fourteen months. In that time the sum of $1,823 has been raised for the work of fighting the liquor traffic. It is the purpose of the union to use every legitimate endeavor to increase its membership between now and the first of February, when it is probable that another campaign will be inaugurated, and meetings will be held, to be addressed by the most prominent temperance orators of the land. It is also proposed to publish literature to be placed in the hands of voters.

About Women.

MRS. HERBERT DUMARESQ and Mrs. Arthur W. Foster, of Boston, have presented the Free Hospital for Women, with a new ward, as a memorial to their father, the late E. D. Jordan.

IT transpires that the anonymous gift of $250,000 toward the erection of the library of the University of the city of New York in 1895, came from Miss Helen Gould. During the present year $60,000 has been given to the university by the same generous donor.

CLARA BARTON, president of the Red Cross, is writing a book giving a full history of that society and its work in the recent war, answering charges made against it and its officers. The volume will be sold by subscription by the American Red Cross Association.

MISS AGNES IRWIN, dean of Radcliffe College, has been nominated by Governor Wolcott, of Massachusetts, to serve on the Paris Exposition Commission in place of Mrs. C. H. Crafts, resigned. Miss Irwin is a great-granddaughter of Benjamin Franklin on her mother's side.

"AUNT LUCY" NICHOLS, a negress of New Albany, Ind., has just been granted a pension of twelve dollars per month by special act of Congress. "Aunt Lucy" is the only female member of a G. A. R. post in the United States. She served through the war with the Twenty-third Indiana, participating in twenty-eight battles.

THE Italian and Polish people of Buffalo, N. Y., are to be favored this winter with free stereopticon lectures on American history, conducted under the auspices of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The lectures are to be written by prominent women of the chapter, and after having been translated into Polish and Italian, will be delivered by well-known citizens of Italian and Polish descent.

MISS ETHEL MARY CHARLES, said to be England's first woman architect, has just completed her time in an architect's office in London, and will be admitted as an associate of the Royal Institute of British Architects this month. She has won several prizes for designs, and intends to open an office in a good business locality. The architectural profession is held by the London papers to be peculiarly adapted to the talents of women.

A MASS-MEETING of undergraduate students was recently held at Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., to protest against the system of co-education now in vogue at the college. Several speeches were made in which it was maintained that the exclusion of women from the college would be to the best interests of the university, and that if the policy admitting women is continued, it will have the effect of greatly reducing the number of the male students.

MRS. ALICE MERRILL HORNE has been elected to the Utah House of Representatives, on the Democratic ticket. She is a capable young woman, who has been a teacher in the public schools. The Hon. Martha Hughes Cannon holds over in the senate. Thus there are now two women in the legislature of Utah, Mrs. Cannon and Mrs. Horne; two in the legislature of Colorado, Mrs. F. S. Lee and Mrs. H. G. R. Wright; and two in the legislature of Idaho, Mrs. Clara Campbell and Mrs. Harriet Noble.

Christmas Giving.

BY ADELAIDE D. REYNOLDS.

'TIS not enough to fill the day with feasting,
With merry laughter and with happy song.
Unto this blessed day some deed of kindness
And word of sweet encouragement belong.
Pause from thy mirth awhile to ease the load
Thy weary neighbor bears along life's road.

'Tis not enough, the love so true and tender,
Plighted to-day beneath the mistletoe;
The faith of friends, the sacred ties of kinship—
Upon this day more warmth our hearts should know.
Let thy love flow, as boundless as the sea,
Into the hearts of all humanity.

'Tis not enough, the dainty Christmas token,
Though loving hearts with generous zeal have glowed;
The bounteous charity, though free and tender,
Is small beside the gift God's love bestowed.
But one fit offering mayest thou impart,
Give unto Him a pure and loving heart.

Our Banner.

BY PHEBE L. HOWELL.

WARP and woof of snowy white,
Crossed with threads of starry light,
Emblems bright with purest gold,
Which the lilies' hearts unfold—
So, with patient hands and true,
On her loom the banner grew.

Busy loom! which never still,
Wove its fabrics at God's will;
Wove the texture pure and fine,
Stamped with mark and name divine.
In her heart His plans He traced,
Set His signet on her face.

Reverently you touch and hold
Snowy field and stars of gold;
Sacred, since her yearning eyes
Turned from these to Paradise;
Sacred, since its pattern grew
Every thread a thought of you.

Lift your banner! and whene'er
Dark-hued ranks of sin appear,
It shall signal to your side
Angel hosts and spirit guide;
Her white flag of purity
Wave you on to victory!

Christmas in the Promised Land.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

"ISN'T Joyce Baxter the oddest girl you ever saw?" exclaimed Veva to her chum one morning.

"What now?" asked Bessie, smiling over her fancy work.

"Why, nothing," replied Veva, "except that she's taken it into her head to spend Christmas with that queer, old-fashioned aunt of hers up in the country instead of here in town where there's going to be so much fun. She is the oddest girl I ever knew. Fancy spending a week in that dull, poky place, where the neighbors live half a mile apart and with that old couple and their hired girl for company! But there's no accounting for tastes. Joyce is lovely in most things, pretty and stylish and always so pleasant, but sometimes when she takes such queer freaks it makes me almost believe she does it for effect. And to think she'll miss the Christmas party at Jean's! I know she's invited, for Jean told me so."

The two girls drifted off from the subject of Joyce into talk of fancy work for Christmas presents and gay costumes for the approaching party.

Meanwhile in Joyce's pretty home on the avenue Mrs. Baxter was holding converse with her dark-eyed daughter. "You're a queer little girl," she was saying, "to prefer spending the holidays up at Aunt Isabel's when all the other girls are so excited about Jean's party. It's to be a nice affair, I know, because Jean's mother has taken counsel with me and there are to be several pretty novelties besides the regular good time. If I were you, dear, I'd give up the idea of going to the Promised Land and stay at home."

But Joyce knew what she wanted, and presently Mrs. Baxter, with a loving little pat on the shoulder left her to herself.

"I believe the child intends to go up into the Promised Land as a regular Christmas fairy," she thought smilingly as she descended the stairs. "All those mysterious little bundles in her room mean something."

But later in the day Joyce slipped her mother's wrap upon that lady's shoulders, brought her hat and gloves and made her go out with her for a little shopping. And on the way she revealed her plans.

"I've made up my mind that there shall be a Christmas tree in the Promised Land this year," she began. "I wrote to Aunt Isabel some time ago and asked some questions. She's written back that the young folks in the Promised Land have never had a Christmas tree and that if I want to go into it I may have her big front room and Uncle Ben will see about the tree. So I've been buying and making some little things, you know, to put on it and now I'm after candy to finish off with."

Mrs. Baxter looked affectionately at her daughter. "You're a good girl, Joyce," she said softly, "and mother's proud of you." And then she opened her own purse and purchased some choice gifts for Aunt Isabel and Uncle Ben. "You can smuggle them onto the tree without their knowing a thing about it," she said. "I declare, Joyce, I do wish I were going to the Promised Land, too!"

"But you can't, you know," laughed Joyce, "there's the Christmas dinner to be looked after and papa to take care of. I'm the only one who can be spared. But won't it be nice? I'll write you all about it the very next day."

The Promised Land is the name given to a narrow valley which runs up among the hills which form a spur of the Allegheny mountains. It is an isolated region, "three miles from nowhere," as some of its inhabitants say, but fruitful farms and comfortable homes are scattered along its length on either side of the straggling road which forms its only street.

When Uncle Ben met Joyce at the train down in the village he was somewhat amazed to see that there was a trunk which he was expected to carry too. But he asked no questions as he cheerfully tugged it into the old sleigh. "Seems kind o' queer she'd bring along a trunk for just a few days," he thought to himself, "but mebby she's going to stay quite a spell." And as the old man tucked the blankets in snug and warm he found himself hoping that she would.

There was seldom a strange face seen on that familiar road which led up into the Promised Land, and Joyce caught fleeting glimpses of interested faces peering out at them as Uncle Ben's old horse jogged heavily along. Two or three of the young girls she had become acquainted with during the preceding summer, when she had spent a week at the farm, and now she gayly waved her hand to them as she caught sight of them at window or door. And so swiftly does news travel, even in the Promised Land, that before nightfall every one knew that Joyce Baxter, Aunt Isabel's niece, had come up to spend the holidays. Somehow the very knowledge of this helped to content some dissatisfied girl-hearts with the prospect of the usual dull Christmas in the valley.

But when next day Uncle Ben's well-known horse and cutter stopped at every gate in the Promised Land and pretty, stylish Joyce came up the path to the front door, followed a moment later by Uncle Ben who never missed the chance of a neighborly visit, there seemed to come all at once into those quiet lives a new something of delight and interest which had not been there before. And when Joyce in her own pleasant way had given her invitation "to come up to Aunt Isabel's to-morrow evening at seven o'clock," they all thought it was lovely and promised to go, but not one of them even suspected a Christmas tree. And it was not only the young people who were asked to come. Not one was slighted. Every family was invited, from Grandma down to the long-dressed baby. Aunt Isabel had said, "Ask 'em all, my dear, the house is big enough to hold 'em, I guess, and anyhow it'll do us good to crowd up and be neighborly." For the truth was that the widely-scattered families were not at all noted for their "neighborliness." All had grown into a stay-at-home habit, or when they went at all it was generally to the village.

A busier household than Uncle Ben's could not be imagined than was his on the day before Christmas. Very early in the morning he and Joyce had driven off up into the hemlock woods and brought home in triumph a beautiful tree, tall, shapely, and stout of branch. And it was Uncle Ben who set it firmly in a block of wood and bore it into the big front room. And it was Belinda, the "help," who popped great panfuls of snowy corn, and Aunt Isabel who sat in her red-covered rocking-chair and strung it into long festoons for the tree. And it was Joyce who filled the generous bags of lace-net she had made at home with candy, raisins, and cracked nuts. And it was Joyce who twined long, spicy-smelling ropes of hemlock to swing from the ceiling and around the walls.

Belinda and Aunt Isabel retired to the kitchen, while Joyce was busy with Uncle Ben in the front room, and presently Belinda's cake making skill was announced by delicious smells from the big oven, and Aunt Isabel sliced the pink ham and sandwiched it in between the daintily-thin buttered bread.

"We'll have tea and coffee both, Belinda," said Aunt Isabel, "and pass the things around." And Belinda smiling broadly in pleased anticipation of the unusual thing which was about to happen, deftly spread the snow-white frosting over the big fruit cake she had allowed to cool.

"It will be nice, that's a fact," she said energetically. "It's wonderful, ain't it, what jest one girl can set a-going when she takes a notion!"

At seven o'clock the Promised Land people presented themselves at Uncle Ben's front door. The old man, shining with hospitality, beamed upon his guests and welcomed each one with a hearty handshake. And next came Joyce with a bright word for every one and a smile and a happy welcome for each and every child. The young girls looked at Joyce in bashful admiration. How pretty she looked in her soft blue wool dress, with one of Aunt Isabel's geranium blossoms in her hair!

They came and came and Uncle Ben overflowed with genial warmth, while Aunt Isabel, whose rheumatism kept her closely to her chair, smiled peacefully upon them all and never once thought of her bright rag carpet under all those snow-dampened feet. Uncle Ben had made a fire in the big sitting-room fireplace and around this the older folks gathered for a friendly visit.

At half-past seven Joyce opened the front room door and ushered the children and young people into the blaze and glory of the first Christmas tree some of them had ever seen. Right proudly did Joyce view the pretty scene, the hemlock-garlanded room, the wreaths above the pictures, but over all and crowning all the lovely tree, towering to the ceiling, aglow with the soft light of dozens of candles, agleam with snowy festoons of popcorn, golden oranges and bags of candies. Joyce had worked hard all day and was tired—at least she had been tired before the people came—but now as she looked into the happy faces and wondering eyes she felt that it had paid.

Who could tell of all the joys of that wonderful Christmas eve! How astonished each boy was when Uncle Ben loudly read his name and handed down to his eager hands some mysterious parcel! How radiantly happy was each small girl who received some pretty thing from that wonderful tree! And no child was forgotten. And then how they all shouted when Uncle Ben peered through his glasses at the parcels he found on the tree for himself! And how they all exclaimed when Joyce undid Aunt Isabel's bundle and laid a beautiful, soft, fleecy, white shawl about her shoulders! And then when Uncle Ben, who had privately invited a minister from the village, asked for a few Christmas remarks, they all listened reverently while that sweet old story of the Babe of Bethlehem was told once more.

After the candles had burned down, sputtered and gone out, the front room was deserted in favor of the big kitchen, where all sorts of gay, romping games were played. Joyce, flushed and merry, wondered once or twice if the girls at Jean's Christmas party were having as much fun as she.

Presently Belinda, important and smiling above her snow-white apron, passed plates and napkins, and Joyce helped her serve the delicious cake and sandwiches and pour the tea and coffee. What a royal good time it was, and how jovial the old men were, and how vivacious the old ladies! Aunt Isabel and Uncle Ben were plainly happy, and so was Belinda, and if the guests were one-half as happy as Joyce they were happy, indeed.

When it was all over and all the guests had departed for their respective homes in the Promised Land, Uncle Ben drew Joyce down upon his knee. "Little girl," he said, "you done well—you done nobly! The true Christmas spirit is in your heart, 'peace and good will.'"

And Aunt Isabel smiled across at her. "You've brought the Christmas feeling into my heart, child," she said softly. "I can't bear to have you go home day after to-morrow."

Joyce laughed gleefully. "I'm not going, auntie," she said. "I've three weeks' vacation, and I'm going to spend it all with you."

Uncle Ben chuckled to himself. "That's the way to talk," said he. "I wondered when I see that trunk of yours if you mebby wasn't going to stay with us a spell and so you be. We'll try to have some sleighrides and candy-pulls up here in the Promised Land while you're here and I don't doubt a mite but what we'll all have a good time."

Professor Herron as an Interpreter of Jesus.

BY LUCINDA B. CHANDLER.

THE lectures of Professor Herron in Willard Hall have been listened to by an audience that crowded its capacity for sitting and standing to the utmost. Both the intense silence and hearty applause have evidenced the earnest interest and approval of the listeners. A gratifying feature of the attendance was a steady increase of young people, especially young men. Under the auspices of the National Christian Citizenship League, these lectures upon "Present Day Problems in the Light of the Teaching of Jesus," were appropriate to the economic situation of our country and the attitude of conscience that seeks righteousness in all public affairs.

Professor Herron stated that, "Broadly speaking, the social problem is a problem of how to so organize the world that all men may be equally secure in the material means and social resources needed for a complete life." Referring to the methods of trusts and the capitalization of watered stock, he said: "Watered stock is a method of high treason, by which corporations forcibly tax the nation for private profit and annually extort millions from American toilers and producers. And this railway system practically administers the government of the United States in all things that concern the system and the governments of the several states of the Union," a statement which is corroborated by the records of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of state legislatures in Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York. Personal experiences were cited, showing that the conscience of the man who wished to do right and help others to live while helping himself, was powerless to accomplish this under the competitive system of greed and special privilege. "The right to do right is the substance of the economic problem."

The basic idea of Professor Herron's interpretation is that the kingdom of God on earth is an adjustment of the relations of social life to the law of love, and that this was the work of Jesus. "It is absurd," he says, "to suppose that Jesus was put to death for going about healing sick people and appealing to individuals to be saved or to be good. He was crucified for disturbing the existing national order of things, crucified as a national menace, because He was aiming at the wrong, at the heart of the nation. We have only to read the gospels with even a little historic sense, to see that the career of Jesus was as certainly political, in relation to His times and nation, as the career of Joseph Mazzini in Italy, or that of Wendell Phillips in America. According to John the first public act of His ministry was to go up to Jerusalem and clean out the capitol. The Jewish temple which Jesus purged was the political capitol of the nation. He was finally put to death by the supreme court of His nation on the ground that He endangered the nation's existence by doing the things He was doing and saying the things He was saying. I can never understand the bold and persistent statement that Jesus had nothing to do with politics and economics except on the ground that we are very anxious to keep Him out of politics and economics." The social problem is, in Professor Herron's estimation, as it is in that of all humanitarian reformers, how to actualize the brotherhood of man in obtaining for all equality of opportunity and the justice of love. That it is only social redemption that can free the individual.

"It is for the sake of the soul that we are saying things about the problems and conditions of society. If the social movement meant simply more bread and a larger bulk of things for each man we should not be so concerned about its outcome. Our charge against civilization and its economic system is that it destroys the human soul; that the present industrial order attacks the citadel of every soul's faith and the foundations of its freedom." "The time has come to distinctly say that civilization must be born again, in order that the individual may see the kingdom of God. Who can deny that successful covetousness, although denounced by Jesus and the scriptures as the supreme crime against God and nations, has been the great American virtue, commanding the highest respect of church and society? Retribution for the whole common life inheres in the nature of our property system. Historically and ethically, private ownership of natural resources rests upon fraud, violence, and force."

This is probably one of the "tearing down" truths of which complaint is made. But no social order of rightness, justice, and freedom of soul can be built up till the gifts of God in nature's resources are the common possession of all the children of men.

Professor Herron says, "Although we idly distinguish between natural and revealed religion, it was to show natural religion as social living that Jesus taught and worked. To show forth His own divine Sonship as the natural life of man, with the brotherhood it brought as the normal human order, was to Jesus an unfailing inspiration. It was as a teacher of eternal principles that Jesus came and His life is a revelation of love as law. His interpretations of the kingdom have far more to do with human relations, with social facts and forces, than with what we understand by religion. We Americans have yet to learn from Jesus that love alone is the fulfilling of liberty, that the social service, not the material gain of the individual, is the end of freedom. Whether we would have it so or not, Jesus holds the key to the social situation and the initiative is His. The Messianic idea is risen and goes before us in the sons of men committed to the social redemption, to lead on to the holy society. Not back, but on, to Christ, is the divine meaning of the social cry."

It has been said by some who do not seem to understand, that Prof. Herron is urging more of Christ in the social system, that his teaching is subversive of Christianity. I have quoted thus at length to show that it is "Christian" in the highest and most practical sense.

A Nineteenth Century Parable.

BY HARRIET E. CLAYTON.

CLOSE by the tallest and strongest tree in all the woods grew a clump of delicate ferns. They thought their home the most beautiful in the world and they were content in the shadow of the big tree's ambitious growth. There were dim visions of a delicious blue, a heaven far, far above them, which the tree-top knew all about; but it was enough that the tree-top knew. The wind made music among the strong, shadowing leaves and the splashing rains were filtered through like spray. Dews settled gently upon the delicate green and each morning found our ferns refreshed and beautiful.

Just outside the woods was a winding road that the ferns had never seen. The red earth, wheel-tracked and hot looking, was not nearly as interesting as the little fernery, and but for the vines that trailed along its edges and the trees that rustled above the vines, the road would have been a failure to artistic sense. Possibly the vines and the rustle did not lessen the jolt of the heavy wagons which carried the farmer's wheat and the farmer's wife side by side past woods and beautiful, hidden ferns. And it is just as possible that our spirits are touched into an unconscious harmony by hidden and unrecognized forces, and that the poetry of life is not so much in circumstance, after all.

The wood ferns knew as little of philosophy as of the red, wheel-tracked road. In the outside world there was much earnest talk about the laws of growth, influence, culture, sphere, and all that; but people seemed not to agree, and what difference did it make, anyway? Here was the self-evident fact of ferns growing delicately beautiful in just such a secluded place as was this at the foot of the big tree. What more could any one ask in way of argument or demonstration? What would ferns be without this daintiness of growth, this delicate color and veining, this feathery outline, and all the exquisitenesses that make ferns just what they are? Back from the dust of the work-a-day road, safe from the plodding step of the tiller of the soil, or a careless wisp from some barefooted youngster driving the cows home at sundown; safe, well-set, and an altogether normal creation is the fern in its appointed place.

But what is this in the tangle of fence and vine, between the road and woods? Ferns, I declare! Push aside the dusty tangle a bit, and there you find the daintiest of little ferns, that nod as shyly and gracefully at the foot of the old rail fence as do their secluded neighbors at the foot of the big, protecting tree. There must be some suitable soil in this thicket. The tips of shadowing branches rustle just beyond the fence, and the dusty highway is very near. The ferns are delicately green, feathery of form and exquisite.

Away down the road, toward the west, stands a rock, lonely-looking in its detachment from woods, vines, and all but the ground on which it rests. It is a gray old rock. Nobody knows how many ages it may have stood there like a sentinel between the woods and setting sun, or under how many moons it has cast its shadow.

But do you know, a closer view reveals a delicate growth of ferns among the seams and scars of this detached old landmark; and there is not so much as the rustle of one tree between these ferns and the blue that their far-away neighbors are dreaming about in sweet and leafy seclusion. There is not a vine to catch the dust as heavy wagons go lumbering by. And the ferns are exquisite.

That was long ago, when the century was young. It has since been learned that woods and shade and leaf mould are made by planting trees. It has been learned that ferns do not need to be kept even to the antiquity of suitable soil and protection, since the soil may be suited to the ferns, and with that much of condition, the protecting element will make itself.

Nature is a curious freak until you know her. With ways of seeming mystery she is most upsetting to systematic and methodical man's theories. Say to her, "thus far," and straightway she meets you with unexpected and interesting proof that you narrow your horizon by close range. If she has use for an air plant, she hangs it as to a spider's web, waters it with the dews of heaven—and it grows.

The century hasn't learned everything yet, but it knows that sphere, as well as invention, is made by need.

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

"THE name of the Lord is a strong tower." "The Lord is our rock" and the material is durable, for it is the immutable promises of God. "Wait on the Lord," for "They that wait on the Lord shall renew their strength." "There is therefore no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." Just to watch the faces and see the strong spiritual belief expressed in the quiet shining eyes, and to hear the fervent "Amens" is inspiring to a passerby in the Willard Hall meetings.

Many strangers testified, one a missionary among the 20,000 Chinese in San Francisco, on her way from a visit to her home in Canada to her field in the far West and thanking God for this home feeling and fervent spirit which she had experienced during this hour. A colored brother closed his remarks by singing in a rich baritone, "Safe in the arms of Jesus," and the audience caught and repeated the refrain. A young man testified in terse language, "Jesus saves me, meekly, sweetly and completely."

. . . . . .

A white-haired, earnest worker said, "The day of my conversion was the happiest day of my life at that time, but I didn't stop there and each day is getting better. I have proved that God is a tower." Another old man with shoulders bent, told of fifty years of straying and striving, but "Oh, God's mercy and tenderness is overpowering and overshadowing!" An earnest young man always looking for some boy he can help, said, "God has created a better object in my heart than for food and clothes and to fling style in the world, and His word is always with me, 'Seek ye first the Kingdom of God.'" A father told of wonderful answer to prayer when his boy was lost four days and no one could find him, not even the police; they gathered together in earnest prayer at night, and the next morning at six the boy came home.

A speaker used the lesson of the shepherd, John x, with wonderful power, especially the line in the ninth verse, "and shall go in and out and find pasture." Such liberty is given, like a boy rushing into the house and out again; it all belongs to him; he is free to come and go; so the Christian is free in God's house; all that belongs to God is ours, because we are heirs. Such beautiful, touching expressions rush from the hearts of the people. Pray God earnestly that prayers offered the last week may be answered.

Anti-Saloon League Convention.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The third annual convention of the American Anti-Saloon League was held in the "Old Stone Church" in the beautiful public square in Cleveland, O., December 6, 7 and 8.

Hon. Hiram Price, the president, presided at all the day sessions. For half a century he has been a prominent temperance man. He was a leader in the Sons of Temperance from their earliest days. Now in his eighty-sixth year he is as straight as an arrow with sight and hearing good. He bears his years with vigor and in his bell-crowned hat, beneath which his white locks fall, he is a striking figure and a man of fine presence in any assembly. His annual address was a sustained effort of an hour or more, rich in argument and anecdote, delivered in full, clear tones and agreeably diversified by wit and humor.

The first vice-president, Rev. Luther B. Wilson, D. D., of Washington, D. C., presiding elder of the Baltimore district M. E. church, presided upon Tuesday evening. An address of welcome by Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D. D., of Cleveland, was responded to by Rev. E. S. Chapman, D. D., of California. Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Ph. D., superintendent of the Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C., stirred all hearts by glowing periods descriptive of the peril to our new possessions from the drink curse and its traffic permitted by our own country within its borders, and pleaded that our nation be aroused to protect the new civilizations from that which has been so harmful to our own. "The most important battles of the Spanish war are yet to be fought in Congress, which will have before it this winter a larger number of the great problems of government than any session of that body since the constitution was formed."

The executive committee for 1898 are Rev. Alpha J. Kynett, D.D., LL.D., chairman of the Board of Direction, Philadelphia; Rev. Francis M. Edwards, Virginia; Mr. F. M. Bradley, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Annie Wittenmeyer, Pennsylvania; Rev. Purley A. Baker, Ohio; Col. Eli F. Ritter, Indiana; Judge Charles A. Pollock, N. Dakota; Rev. J. F. Brant, Michigan; all but two of these were present.

Mr. James F. Ewen, the indefatigable secretary, occupied the platform with his alert assistant, Jesse C. Suter, both of Washington, D. C.

A prominent figure, and active in all the business of the convention, was the able superintendent of the American Anti-saloon League, Rev. Howard H. Russel, D.D. He reported twenty-two states as organized already, and three others getting ready to organize.

The American Anti-Saloon League originated in a conversation between Archbishop Ireland, of the Roman Catholic Church, and Rev. Alpha J. Kynett, chairman of the permanent committee on temperance and prohibition of the Methodist Episcopal Church. As they chanced to travel together from Chicago to Philadelphia, they conversed about the suppression of the drink traffic. They agreed that a platform upon which all opponents of the saloon could stand for united and aggressive work was practicable and very desirable. Later Dr. Kynett learned from Rev. Luther B. Wilson, D.D., of the success of the Anti-saloon League, of Washington, D. C., and proposed that a national organization be formed upon the same plan. In conjunction with the Anti-saloon League, of Ohio, this proposition was carried out at Washington, D. C., Oct. 19, 1895.

It is a league composed of organizations. It rivals none. It antagonizes none. It brings together representatives of different denominations, all political parties, all colors, nationalities, and sections of country. At that time there were forty-seven affiliated bodies, at this time there are 200 affiliated bodies. Thirty-two of these are national. Young ladies of the Y. W. C. T. U., of the city, enlivened the evenings with their songs. One of the bright addresses was delivered by Rev. F. D. Power, D.D., of Washington, D. C.

For the first time the National W. C. T. U. appointed full delegates; namely, Mrs. M. D. Ellis, of N. J.; Mrs. Clark, president W. C. T. U., of Ohio; and Mrs. Clinton Smith, president W. C. T. U., of District of Columbia. Wednesday morning Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, being present, was invited to the platform, and spoke for fifteen minutes upon scientific temperance instruction in the public schools.

Resolutions were adopted urging work for the Ellis Bill, and against the collection of internal revenue by the United States government for the illegal sales of liquor in localities where prohibition prevails, against the reduction of the tax on beer and in favor of the use of unfermented wine at communion. Yours,

MRS. CLINTON SMITH.

The Bible Institute.

DEAR EDITORS:—In daily life, in all parts of the country I find that there are hundreds of consecrated men and women with an intense love for souls who feel called of God to do His work. All they lack to do effective service for Him is a systematic knowledge of the Bible.

The question asked me hundreds of times by young people convicted by a direct call of God for evangelistic work or where they could be used for His glory was, "Where can I obtain this knowledge?" This question started the Bible Institute in Chicago as a training school for Home and Foreign missions ten years ago.

I have become convinced the way to reach the masses is to reach them; that is, to go after them. I have not announced "Hold the Fort" in my meetings for years; the time for holding the fort is past and now we must go out of the fort and fight hand to hand with the power of evil. The Bible Institute at Chicago aims to equip workers who can fight this way—hand to hand. The school is open the year round and as the course is in a circle of two years, students may enter any time. Between one and two hundred of those who have passed through the door of the Institute are telling the story of the Gospel in foreign lands and more than seven hundred are engaged in home missions and as evangelistic preachers, regular pastoral work and church visitors, say to nothing about those who have gone forth with the Gospel Message of songs.

The many missions in Chicago give unbounded field for personal work and the lectures of the morning and study in the afternoon find practical demonstration in the missions and cottage prayer meetings of the evenings. Students are not only instructed in preaching the Gospel but in singing it as well. No one doubts the power of song and many a recruit in the army of the redeemed has received a call in some message of song. Prof. D. B. Towner, the well-known gospel singer and writer, is superintendent of the musical course with competent assistants.

The Institute is undenominational, or better, inter-denominational, and enrolls both men and women as students. Separate dormitories are provided for the sexes. Representatives from all races have been enrolled as students the past years and more than thirty denominations were represented among the students last year.

I shall be glad to hear personally from any who desire to know more of the work of the Institute at my Chicago address, 80 Institute Place.

Five Months Work in North California.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—First I want to say that California white-ribboners are "true blue"—not the blue of the pessimist, but the true blue that never says die in a good cause. We found in coming in contact with the rank and file, that our cause is steadily increasing, public sentiment more favorable, a more hearty co-operation of the ministers of all denominations. More especially is this true of our purity work, one reason being undoubtedly that this department is not directly (though it ought to be) in politics. However, we will not have very much better legislation until we get better legislators, and we will not get any better legislators until the home life is reconstructed, and the dignity of conferring life receives more adequate recognition at the hands of parents.

I began filling engagements the 10th of January, 1898. In five months I gave 183 lectures, held nine purity conferences, spoke at three county conventions, also at the summer school of methods, addressed by request three classes in the University of the Pacific, namely, classes of sociology, psychology and revealed religion. I have spoken for the Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth League, ministerial associations, Salvation Army, missions, railroad men, held services in jails and spoken before city councils, introduced the White Cross and White Shield into young people's societies, organized one Y with twenty-two members, secured 582 new members to the W. C. T. U., including active and honoraries. Much of the success of this five months' engagement is due to the well-planned route by the state president and corresponding secretary, Mrs. Peet and Mrs. Spence, as well as the able and efficient county presidents.

I feel I can not close this article without mentioning one day's work en route to the National at St. Paul. This day's work was in Flagstaff, Ari. I rode by carriage twenty-six miles, to and from the renowned "Cliff Dwellers," walked two and one-half miles up and down ledges and precipices, gave an address at 2:30 P. M., organized a union with eleven members, gave a lecture in the evening at which twenty-six more members were added, making a new union with thirty-seven members. Flagstaff has excellent men and women. If their leader, Mrs. Sisson, can stay with them, we shall hope for good results. She showed her interest immediately upon being elected president, by donating two dollars for a purity circulating library. I wrote at once to the territorial president and corresponding secretary to nurse, in every possible way, by practical help and encouraging words, their newborn child. May all our baby unions be so lovingly and carefully nourished that they may live to see our arch enemy, the "legalized saloon," banished from our otherwise fair land!

Miss Agnes E. Slack in Scotland.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Dundee, where lived the founder of the British Women's Temperance Association, Mrs. Margaret E. Parker, was recently privileged along with some other cities in Scotland to have a visit from Miss Agnes E. Slack, Hon. secretary of the W. W. C. T. U. The largest hall in the city was crowded, the attendance over two thousand, being as great as when Lady Henry Somerset spoke on a former occasion from the same platform. In addition to the large mass-meeting in Kinnaird hall, a drawing-room meeting was held at Shanghai, West Ferry, near Dundee, the home of the writer. After prayer and remarks from the chair, Miss Agnes E. Slack gave a most interesting résumé of pioneer work in the W. W. C. T. U.

The great need of carrying on the work which Miss Willard so nobly organized and which was so near her heart during her last moments on earth was dwelt upon, and a tender appeal was made for funds to extend the work in places not yet reached by white-ribboners. The drawing-room collection amounted to £3 10*s.* for the World's missionary enterprise.

A meeting was held in Friends Institute Hall, Dundee, on November 1, composed of temperance workers and other friends, Miss Slack being unable to be present. A drawing-room meeting was held the following day, and at the close of Miss Slack's address she was presented with a handsome bouquet tied with streamers of white ribbon.

Miss Slack also attended the Edinburgh council meetings, Scottish Christian Union, B. W. T. A., November 8, and gave a clear and explicit account of what is being done by the W. W. C. T. U. The address was much appreciated by the delegates and other ladies present. Information was given as to the holding of the World's Conventions in various parts and after full details were given the matter of the convention being held in Edinburgh in 1900 was considered favorably by the council.

A public meeting was held in Edinburgh in the evening in the Free Assembly hall, when there was a fair attendance. Mrs. Blaikie presided and Miss Slack was the principal speaker. Several local gentlemen and other speakers from a distance also took part. The musical program by the Edinburgh white-ribbon choir (in uniform) was much appreciated by the audience.

Saloons in Boston.

TO THE UNION SIGNAL:—In your paper of November 10, I see a quotation from Dr. Lorimer's speech before the Temperance Congress held in Tremont Temple, in which he said that the increased vote for the saloon in Boston came from the Back Bay and other wealthy and aristocratic portions of the city, where the people will not have saloons, but thrust them upon their less fortunate brothers in the poorer districts. I do not understand how Dr. Lorimer can be so poorly informed with regard to the aristocratic part of the city. While it is true that it has not its full share of saloons, there are within an easy walk of a few minutes at least ten saloons, and seven of them are licensed to sell every day and night in the year, including all Sundays and holidays. They are gilt-edged and attractive, just the kind which the people of that part of the city call for.

I have never heard of a refusal to grant a license in that locality, nor of any protest from those who live there against the kind of saloon they patronize. C. WYMAN WOOD.

Letters of Greeting.

[We quote a few brief extracts from the many letters sent to the National Convention, expressing the sympathy and good-will of our friends.—THE EDITORS.]

MY hearty Christian greetings to the earnest workers gathered together on this important occasion. May the remembrance of the great spirit which has so lately passed into the paradise of God bind us all together and stimulate us to push forward in the work.

AGNES E. WESTON.
Portsmouth, England.

I am in heartiest accord with your great aim and effort to promote temperance and individual and social purity. FRANKLIN W. FISK.
Chicago Theological Seminary.

With so much accomplished in the first quarter of the race, what may not be expected of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union on the homestretch of the century.

HENRY W. BLAIR.
Manchester, N. H.

I would like to urge upon our good women, who are doing so much to help men and women, that, remembering Miss Willard's fondness for the animal world, we do more than ever for the speechless this coming year.

SARAH K. BOLTON.
Cleveland, O.

I pray and fully expect that the W. C. T. U. will accomplish more in the next ten years than it has done in any preceding decade in its history. The Lord's message for you in this crisis is found in Joshua 1:1–7.

J. W. BASHFORD.
Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, O.

Gladly would I be in body to-day where I am in spirit, with you brave ones who are waging the greatest and most righteous war in the universe. May God speed you in your noble, unselfish efforts to make the world a better, safer place to live in. MARIETTA HOLLEY.
Bonnie View, Adams, N. Y.

I am voicing the feeling of our World's W. C. T. U. and the B. W. T. A. in sending our deepest sympathy to your National Convention at St. Paul. How you will all miss Miss Willard! But it is a joy to us in this sad time to know the white-ribbon women of America are marching on.

AGNES E. SLACK.
Ripley, Derbyshire, England.

The memories of the Crusade are very precious to me. They recall the most thrilling experiences of my life. The well-being of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—the "Crown of the Crusade"—has always been dear to my heart. Cut off from active association, I still watch eagerly for every published indication of success.
Slate Mills, O. M. G. CARPENTER.

I do pray the dear Lord to be present, and that every delegate may be possessed with the self-sacrificing spirit of the Master who gave Himself for the world. I would like to witness to the love of God who has kept the Crusade fire burning in my heart, which He kindled December 15, 1873. ESTHER MCNEILL.
Fredonia, N. Y.

I am glad again to cry, All Hail! to the noble white-ribboned and white-souled women of the W. C. T. U. The translation of the leader is a call to every member to so live and labor that the holy influences she set in motion may increase mightily year by year, and I cannot but believe that her spirit will labor with ours still.

BENJAMIN FAY MILLS.
Brookline, Mass.

I count it always an honor to have my name on that first committee of five to organize the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. As in the past, so in the future, may God bless this great organization, and give to its leaders wisdom to direct the stupendous interests for which the moral and spiritual activities of the age have made it so largely responsible.
New York. (MRS.) J. H. KNOWLES.

My loving greetings to all the dear ones. I hope the keynote of the Convention will be, that though the beloved leader has passed to the sphere that is beyond our ken, the evil she fought remains still to be fought, and God will give to those who remain the gifts and graces they need with which to carry on the fight, even as He gave to those who have passed on before.

LAURA ORMISTON CHANT.
49 Gower St., London, W. C.

At such a time, I can not withhold an expression of my admiration of your great society, and my affection and reverence for your departed leader. If no one arise to take her place, may we not believe that the aggregated wisdom and love of the great and noble army of women who wear the white ribbon will be sufficient for every emergency and will carry on the war against that enemy of all righteousness (licensed by our people to fill our treasuries and to deplete our manhood), until our whole land is freed from the traffic in drink?

(REV.) CHARLES W. BALDWIN,
Presiding Elder of the M. E. Church, West Baltimore District, Baltimore, Md.

Though differing from you on the subject of prohibition, believing that the law of love which Christ came to illustrate is far more efficient in this great reform than that of law, yet I rejoice at the splendid work you have done in calling the attention of the whole world to the subject and importance of temperance. A great work is still before you in trying to save the young men of the country from the demoralizing effects of the war. (MRS.) DIO LEWIS.
New York.

With the sweet voice of our translated leader sounding in our ears, and the same spirit of Divine love filling our hearts that guided and shaped the whole life of Frances E. Willard, let us rise and face the stern realities and duties before us, arranging and disposing of them in such a manner as to make the work of our silver jubilee a stepping-stone to the glory of eternity, assured to us as to our dear one at the close of her fifty golden years.

LEONORA M. LAKE,
Third Vice-Pres. Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America.
St. Louis, Mo.

Among the many notable gatherings taking place year by year in our great democratic country, hardly one holds my interest like yours. If ever I wish I was a woman it is that I might work with you when I see what your noble union is doing. America seems to be the battle ground for humanity, and yours is one of the grandest causes yet undertaken for man. In the Master's name push the battle, not only to the wall, but till the walls of drunkenness in our loved land fall flat. M. V. B. KNOX, President Red River Valley University, Wahpeton, North Dakota.

I do not forget that you represent much besides abstinence from alcoholic drinks. With you, in all your contentions, is the knowledge and enlightenment of the world which we call science, physiological, domestic, industrial, political. The churches are coming to your point of view, and the Christianity of Christ is all on your side. The mighty tide of progress which flows out of the hand of God, irresistible, as the ages move, bears you on its crest to victory. "Agitate, educate, organize," and may God bless you all. Most truly yours,

ISAAC J. LANSING,
Pastor Green Ridge Presbyterian Church, Scranton, Pa.

The wonderful moral power exercised and the great financial assistance rendered by the W. C. T. U. during the campaign for protection of the home in carrying the states of North and South Dakota for constitutional prohibition when that question was first submitted to the voters of those states, convinced all of us who were active in that measure that the labors of your organization have not been in vain. The assistance rendered our order in planting the banner of total abstinence among our citizens of Scandinavian ancestry is greatly appreciated by the officers and members of the Grand Lodge of Minnesota, jr. (Scandinavian) Independent Order of Good Templars. A. A. ANDERSON, G. C.
Minneapolis, Minn.

The most hopeful prophecy of the time, which has become much more plainly discerned since your last Convention, is the drawing together of the diverse and often opposing agencies and workers in this field. However the various individuals and organized bodies may differ as to method, we are all more and more disposed—and it is the evidence of God's spirit among the workers, and crowning the work that it is so—to carry forward that sentiment and practice, which is embodied in the maxim of the American Anti-Saloon League for the current year: "Let us emphasize points on which we agree, and avoid subjects as to which we differ." We may well thank God most earnestly for this goodly spirit of unity among us.

HOWARD H. RUSSELL,
Supt. American Anti-Saloon League.

Our Children.

If I Were Santa Claus.

BY FRANCES BENNETT CALLAWAY.

I WOULDN'T leave all the goodies and plums
In the great big house on the hill.
The selfish boy there has more than enough,
And does nothing but stuff
Every day in the year.

I would save some of the sweetmeats and drums
For the poor little cottage down there by the mill.
A sack of bright gold I would drop at the door,
And diamonds like walnuts roll over the floor,
And even up things that are queer.

If you were Santa Claus! Ho! Ho! Ho!
Now I happen to know
The boy who lives in the house on the hill,
Poor fellow, is miserably lonely and ill
Every day in the year.

But the youngsters at play in the cot by the mill
Why, the urchins rushed out in the wind and the snow,
And captured the richest I have to bestow,
Health, hearty good spirits, love—whisper it low—
These are gifts for a prince to hold dear.

How the Twins Kept Christmas.

In Two Chapters.

BY ADA MELVILLE SHAW.

CHAPTER I.

"BUT, Seth, I don't see why!"

"Why—you can't have Christmas without a tree and a minister."

"We could get a tree."

"But you can't get a minister. You have to have a conf'rence before you can have a minister."

"What's a conf'rence?"

"Oh, I know—mamma told me—it's ministers and things—and then all the ministers have 'pointments—new ones."

"What has it all got to do with our Christmas tree?"

"Oh, girls are so stupid! You can't have a tree, Karthie, without a meetin' and you can't have a meetin' without a minister, can you?"

"Well, I guess a tree—'s a tree, just the same."

"But it isn't a Christmas tree, so you've just got to give in for once."

Karthie gave in far enough to be still, and Seth's rosy lips were set in what Katherine called his "must-face."

The two were twins, living with their widowed mother in a village, beautiful for situation but famous for nothing in particular. Usually it was a dull little place, but just now, a week before Christmas, there was some excitement on hand.

First, the preacher, or the minister as his little twin friends called him, had died a few weeks before. He had come alone to the village on the hillside and had helped the people until they had built a tiny chapel.

There the villagers came twice on Sunday to hear what a good man could tell them of righteous living and learn something about a world better and brighter than their village home. Then a dozen of the younger children attended school in the chapel on week days, the grave, tall preacher busying himself with copy-books and stubby pencils and tongue-tripping syllables.

The little ones learned more than pot hooks and "figgerin'." Every day they gathered close about the teacher and listened with round eyes to certain "stories" that stirred their hearts as they never had been stirred before. They were all about one person, these strange, sweet stories—a Man whom the teacher called the Good Shepherd.

In that listening group of children two always stood closest to the teacher's side, dark-eyed Katherine, and blue-eyed Seth, the twins. They knew all the stories by heart, but there were two they liked better than the rest. They called them "The Manger Story" and "The Mountain Story."

The first one was about the night when the Good Shepherd was born, while the stars of that first Christmas were shining down on Bethlehem's plain, and the angels told the shepherds the wonderful news.

The second story was about a silly sheep that had strayed away from the safe fold out to the bleak mountains, where thorns tore its snowy fleece, stones bruised its feet, and the cruel wolves howled all night long.

But now the teacher and the minister was dead. The people had sent away to the city and got a stone—a little white stone, with a lamb and a shepherd's crook carved upon it. The school children often played their games about the stone, and on Sundays the people used to gather there and remember what their friend had taught them. They had nowhere else to go, for the chapel was closed, since the one voice among them, that was fitted to speak there with authority was silenced forever.

But a worse thing than the minister's death had come to the village. It was the day after the funeral that Seth ran home in great excitement.

"There's a new place come here, mother!"

"Where is it, dear?"

"Down by the postoffice—they're building it. Will it be a new chapel, mother?"

"No, dear. One chapel is all that is needed here, and that is closed now."

It was, indeed, not a new chapel that was being built and the people groaned at heart when the word saloon was painted in great gilt letters across the front of the building. And well they might groan, for here, indeed, was the wolf come to the fold, ready to snatch the first innocent lamb that should venture within its reach.

The stories of the Good Shepherd had not been told in vain. The minister's memory was as green as the snow was white on his quiet resting place, when Joe Schultz, the saloonkeeper, announced a "Grand Opening and Turkey Lunch, free for all." He was glad to sell his roast turkeys to the butcher of whom he bought them and acknowledge the Grand Opening a failure. Only two or three of the villagers had attended, and these stole away early, and half-ashamed turned their steps toward the carved figure of a lamb on the hillside, and, in their hearts promised the minister to remember him better in future.

"Let's go to the minister's grave," said Katherine to Seth, "and think. Maybe if we're there we can find out some way for a tree. I always think when I sit by the lamb that the Good Shepherd is near somewhere—his crook's there, you know."

So they climbed the snowy path up the hillside and sat down on a fallen tree, facing the carved lamb that rested at the head of the white mound. They had sat thus, silent, a long time for two happy children, when Katherine jumped up and clapped her hands.

"Oh, I have a splendid idea, Seth. You know that nice man in the new store next the postoffice—"

"He's not a nice man. Mother said we mustn't go near there."

"Please listen, Sethie, till I get through! I'm sure he's nice, because he always takes off his hat when I go by, and says, 'How do you do, little lady?'"

"He'd better! You are a little lady," vigorously protested the twin brother. "If he isn't nice to you, I'll—I'll—talk to him about it." He wanted to say something stronger, but he realized a slight difference in size and weight between himself and the burly saloonkeeper.

"Well," continued Katherine, "we'll ask him to please cut us down a tree and carry it to the chapel and light a fire. Then we'll sweep up and dust and distribute the singing books, and ring the bell. The people will all come to see what is the matter. You can say the 'Welcome' piece you said last year and I'll sing 'Hark, the angels.' It'll be some like Christmas, won't it? The chapel is so cold and lonesome now. Oh, I wish God hadn't wanted our minister quite so soon!"

An hour later the saloon-keeper was startled by a timid knocking at his door. He opened it himself, and there stood the "little lady" holding tight to Seth's hand. Seth's must-face had hidden all his dimples, for he felt, somehow, as if that door did not lead to a place where the "little lady" ought to go.

Our Cozy Corner.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—"Merry Christmas" to the boys and girls of our Cozy Corner! I wish I could take every one of you down State street these busy days, and have you see the beautiful toys revolving in the windows on great wheels. Then there are the most beautiful doll houses, and the dolls are walking along, with a slide and a jerk, and some are continually going up and down stairs. There is such a crowd, and people jostle and push so much that I am sure you would be glad to get back in the cars and be whirled away to your homes again.

Then we have had a cat show, which may seem strange to some of you who have so many Maltese and white kittens you do not know what to do with them. Some of them were pretty white Angoras, with long, bushy tails, and some were grey Chinchillas, and they were priced all the way from ten dollars to fifty. Then there was a tame wild cat from the woods of Minnesota, and he was named Bromo Seltzer, and he lives in a drugstore and is very tame.

This is the merry Christmas season for you all, and I hope you will love the story of the Christ Child more than ever before. I hope, too, you will not think so much about Santa Claus coming to you that you will forget doing something to make others happy, for if you do, you will not have in your heart the sweet spirit of the Christ Child. There are so many little children in this world who have not a warm home, nor love, nor food, nor clothes and presents like you. Try to remember some of these, and make them a Merry Christmas, for the Christ Child loves these children.

Lovingly yours,

AUNT MARY.

The Christmas Gift of 1871.

IN the heart which beats beneath the white ribbon the thought of God's great gift to the world will always be associated with that of His gift to womanhood which came at Christmas tide a quarter of a century ago. It is unique among "gifts to the children of men." It has meant much for the world through what it has done for us. Under our commission we have become broader minded, more tender, wiser, braver. The necessary accompaniment of such development must be reflex action upon society, but there is nothing in present effect greater than what it has done for ourselves. What privilege and uplift has thereby come into commonplace lives! No life can be wholly commonplace when the mind has been made a kingdom. To what heights the common, everyday woman may rise! If by some subtle process a thought record could be taken from the brain of the student of our curriculum, and a mental impress from another of equal capacity and opportunity but who has found no time for these things, we could wish no better object lesson than the contrast there would be shown.

Any good woman can and does have high thoughts, but you cannot expect and you will not find anything like the habit of thought which comes from this leading in the woman who does not follow our way. The white-ribbon woman is cosmopolitan. She is thinking with the women of forty different tongues. Thoughts like glancing arrows fly far, feathered with the word from Australia, the Cape or Berlin. She studies, as she ought, the improvement of her surroundings, but with a deeper thought than for something nice and new. The proposed change is prompted by the bit of hygienic science in her last UNION SIGNAL, or she is prompted to a consideration of the educational trend of the new picture, even a choice in colors, believing that visible harmonies bear on the spiritual.

Every woman's thoughts are much upon her children. They are moulded, lifted, expanded by impressions from "The Culture and Care of Childhood," or bear in recurring refrain some strong, wise epigram of "A Great Mother."

She reads of trouble, sin, sorrow, disorder, and does not dismiss the subject with an alas! for misguidance and misfortune. She muses on causes and responsibilities and remedies. She not only pities but knows the channels through which some touch of balm may reach every need that can be classed, and dispenses consolation as best she can.

That other woman's mental chart is like an outline map. Hers is filled in; there are mountain heights and lines of communication with a greater world. We write of the white-ribbon woman who does read our department literature and THE UNION SIGNAL, our "guide, philosopher and friend," who does value and plan for and find highest enjoyment in our institutes, conventions and schools.

How faint a glimpse is this of our Crusade Christmas gift! It has glorified the everydayness of the common life. It has given genius opportunity. Would we might better impart our open secret. Would we might organize the aimless and the misdirected energies. How much jangling of sweet bells would make harmony could their symbols be written in our score and keyed to our music. Why should women neglect so great salvation? Must a chosen people ever be few?

What shall we ask for our Christmas gift this year? Forgetting self, shall we invoke a broader revelation—a wider shining without stint or limit—ask that our gift be made the understood and accepted heritage of every woman? Say we all amen?

Good Will to Men.

IN the rush, the push, the hurrying, jostling crowds, the seeming lack of patience and kindliness for employés in the stores, one wonders whether the Christmas spirit is reserved for one's own fireside, if reserved at all.

Throngs of tired, nervous, anxious women are in the stores and on the streets these busy days, vainly trying to solve the problem of making five dollars buy ten dollars' worth of presents, half of which are duty gifts paying last year's obligations, or anticipating those of the present season.

Bundles are everywhere. They are bumping against you on the crowded pavements, in the street cars and piled in the windows; at home they are under the beds or in secret places, some full of love and sacrifice, many the result of toil and research, many more an ineffable burden to the overtasked woman with the limited purse.

If only people would call a halt to indiscriminate Christmas gifts, it would relieve multitudes who do not recover financial balance till far along in the new year. Husbands and fathers dread the season. They do not like to deny money at such a time, for they believe in Christmas giving to their loved ones. But the name of those is legion who would like to run away till it is all over, because of their added responsibility and unwillingness to refuse demands they cannot really afford.

We know a woman who gives no presents outside her family at Christmas, but sometime during the year, she remembers in a delicate way the friends she loves to honor. Thus the gift is a sweet surprise. But how many of us have felt an ungrateful heart sink, to see some name on a handsome Christmas gift, because we felt that the giving was a mere form and placed us under an unpleasant obligation we wished at once to cancel.

Let the love that gives itself be ever with us at this blessed season, emblematic of the gift of the Prince of Peace; but in Christian hearts and homes, why not start a crusade against all giving outside one's very dearest at Christmas, always excepting where it is needed to bring cheer to the cheerless, hope to the hopeless, hospitality to the lonely?

Let the Christmas spirit extend in kindness to the weary shop girl, to the forlorn beggar who stands with outstretched hands, to the homesick boy or girl away from home, to the family washerwoman, to the man out of work, to the sick neighbor, to the homeless in our midst, to lonely, neglected ones, who feel a sense of relief when the holidays are over, because they are shut out from the charmed circle of life's favored few.

When "Peace on earth, good-will to men" is really here, the spirit of the Christ child will find an abiding place all the year round. When all men live as brothers and give the best of themselves to each other, not for duty's sake, but love's, every day of the year will be a Christmas day.

The Week of Prayer.

"MORE things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of."

A preacher was heard to say recently, that were it possible at one stroke to take out of the world all praying souls, the powers of unrighteousness thus left without restraint, would of themselves consume themselves until this fair earth became a horrible, hopeless wreck. The statement is a strange one. We quote it only to give emphasis to another, viz.: Christians do not live up to their privileges in prayer, nor do they fully realize the vital necessity of prayer in all the relations of life. The story of the Bible, from cover to cover, is one of prayer. Every hero there, was a man who petitioned God and received the reward of his faith. "The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." When an individual, a community, a nation, ceases to pray, it has written the sentence of its own certain downfall.

America prays. Not as fervently and as universally as we hope some day she will. But throughout her borders holy men of God hold up steadfast hands of supplication to the King of nations. This, alone, we believe to be the secret of the young nation's power and glory.

For more than half a century, the first week of January, by the devout consent of many Christians in many lands, has been consecrated to united prayer. As 1899 draws near, the Evangelical Alliance invites the United States to pause in its commercial hurry and for one week turn its united thought to spiritual things.

The suggested topics lie close to the nation's needs:

January 1.—Sermons on Christian Unity. John 17: 23.

January 2.—Prayerful Confession, need of God's grace, Christ's abiding presence, the Spirit's guidance and power, Christian witnessing.

January 3.—The Church Universal—for its growth in grace and works of righteousness.

January 4.—Nations and their Rulers.

January 5.—Foreign Missions.

January 6.—Home Missions.

January 7.—Families and Schools.

January 8.—Sermons on the Power of United Effort. Lev. 26: 8.

The white-ribbon army is gathered from among the praying women of the world. The foregoing program will be observed by none more faithfully or more intelligently than by white-ribboners.

The suggested themes are dear and familiar.

Are we not looking forward to the day when loyalty to Christ shall be acknowledged as something larger than loyalty to creed and dogma?

We believe—we pray—that the teachable spirit is ours, for out of that spirit grows prayerful confession. Those who would teach must often sit at the feet of Christ for reproof, correction, and illumination.

Nations and their rulers—this theme is rarely off our lips and should lie always on our hearts. The liquor curse is in the halls of power around the world, and the Captain of our salvation is King of kings and Lord of lords.

As for foreign and home missions, what is the W. C. T. U. but a great missionary band for God and home and the world?

Family life and school life we never forget, for we believe that in home and school our nation's future is being determined.

Lastly, what burning testimonies we can bear to the truth of the text for sermons on January 8: "Five of you shall chase an hundred, and an hundred of you shall put ten thousand to flight." Have we not been to the organized, legalized power of the saloon as five to an hundred and an hundred to ten thousand? We walked out on that promise a quarter of a century ago. For a quarter of a century we have stood on its mighty platform of faith. By God's grace and by faith in His name we intend to stand there, "praying always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit," until the rulers of the darkness of this dear old world have been forever put to flight.

The Making of a True American.

"ADMIRAL DEWEY might have sailed away from Manila, May 2, having fulfilled his orders, but he had the high and mighty American spirit in him, and clung." So writes Murat Halstead, in one of his interesting letters from the Philippines, which he recently visited. The veteran editor strikes the loftiest note of eulogy yet reached, when he speaks of the American spirit as "high and mighty"—words none too strong so far as the illustrious admiral and his noble comrades of the army and navy are concerned, and, indeed, with all true regard for truth and modesty, we may claim as much for the American nation itself. In the best sense of the word we have, in a measure, proved ourselves a high-spirited and therefore mighty people. It was the high and mighty American spirit that arraigned the cruel tyranny of Spain and effectively drove her from the provinces so long misruled. It is this masterful temper that now calls for the retention of the Philippines, confidently announcing itself as capable of bringing order out of chaos and ruling successfully a distracted population. A great and untried future awaits us, which will test to the utmost the quality of our manhood and womanhood.

What is the genesis of the "high and mighty" American spirit? What are the qualities that go to make the true American? Almost everything depends upon finding the right answer. Let us not be deceived; we must go to the root of things and know where is the hiding of our power, if the future is to excel the past. It would be absurd to claim that we are what we are because we live where we do. The spirit of power is not indigenous to our rich soil, nor is it wafted to us from the mysterious ice fields of the far North. Our lofty mountains say, "It is not in me," and the great rivers say, "It is not in me." China excels us in numbers, and the dreamy Orient in venerable traditions. Whence, then, have we our supremacy? And where is the source of our might? The truest American manhood is not the result of accidents, externals, nor anything artificial, theatrical or lucky, as a recent French writer has pointed out, but is built upon certain substantial qualities that go to make a strong character.

The American spirit is, first of all, the outgrowth of a mighty faith in God. From the earliest colonial day of fasting and prayer our youth have been taught to love and trust God. The glorious truths of the Bible have been as household words among us, saturating the mind, and swaying the conscience. We have sacrificed much to enjoy a pure religion and in consequence have reaped an hundred fold. With gratitude and awe, therefore, it behooves us to place first in our affections the God of our fathers and teach our youth the supreme importance of an enlightened Christian conscience.

Another element in the making of a true American has been our national love of home. Fortunately we have so far steered clear of the enervating abominations prevalent in some parts of the old world. Self-respect and self-conquest have been as an armor of steel to the typical American, he disdains to wallow in the mire of sensualty. The words "mother," "sister," "sweetheart," are sweeter music to him than the songs of painted sirens. If now our young men and women can only be so inwardly fortified against the wicked fascinations of vice as to preserve moral purity intact, no power on earth can withstand our armies or our missionaries. One of the most priceless of American traits is our irrepressible love of fair play, liberty and righteousness. It has made possible individual initiative and developed the spirit of heroic striving. The typical American would have been an impossibility with the crushing weight of tyranny of any sort resting upon him. And if he shall find that the present industrial system is developing forms of slavery and oppression, it is his prerogative to substitute some more equitable system in its stead. If this means the survival of the fittest, the more we have of it, the better.

THE banner given by the National superintendent of medal contests was won again this year by Missouri, Miss Ellen D. Morris, state superintendent. She reported one contest to every ten members, 304 in all, a showing that speaks well for the dissemination of temperance truths in that state. As the National superintendent had announced that the state retaining the banner a second year should keep it permanently, it now becomes the property of Missouri.

THE silver star offered by the National press superintendent to that state making the greatest advance in press work was awarded to Missouri. Maine was given the second place. Mrs. Hoffman received the star for her absent state press superintendent, Mrs. Alice Blackburn, speaking words of commendation for the efficient work done by her under seemingly difficult circumstances, for Mrs. Blackburn has six little ones, and consequently innumerable home duties.

FINAL returns have been received from the various counties on the constitutional amendments submitted at the recent election. Woman suffrage was defeated by 4,008 and the South Carolina dispensary system by 965, while the initiative and referendum has been carried by a majority of a little more than 6,000. The vote on the three amendments reached only about one-half the total vote polled at the election.

MRS. CALLIE HOOVER HOWE, National organizer, starts the new year promptly with the report of a new union organized November 29, at Woodbine, Iowa, with twenty-two active and nine honorary members.

MRS. HUNT says: "If the next generation are not intelligent total abstainers, it will be the fault of the temperance men and women of today, who fail to enforce their temperance education laws."

Personal.

MRS. M. A. HARMAN, of Seattle, Wash., has been at Headquarters full of enthusiasm over the prospect of assisting in the local arrangements for entertaining us in her city next year.

MISS AGNES SLACK is to read a paper at the Internaional Temperance Congress to be held in Paris, in April next. Her subject will be "Woman's place in the temperance reformation."

MRS. OWEN HITCHCOCK and her daughter, Miss Irene, of Canada, lent efficient aid to Mrs. Hilton in a recent meeting in Willard Hall. Both ladies are excellent speakers and Miss Irene also sings very acceptably.

THE Misses Vincent and Cummins, of Australia, who did such splendid work in Canada during the plebiscite campaign, have been lending their aid to St. Paul white-ribboners since the Convention. They were welcome guests at Headquarters on December 10, leaving that night for Toronto, whence they will sail for England on December 21.

REV. DAVID MACREA, late of Dundee, Scotland, minister, author, lecturer, elocutionist and humorist, is in America, and at present in Chicago. The Scottish League and the Grand Lodge of I. O. G. T., of Scotland, commend him to temperance workers in this country. Mr. Macrea is being entertained by Rev. Dr. Holyoke, 1170 Washington Boul., where he may be addressed.

IN the record of the yea and nay vote on the recommendation to drop the Temple, the names of Mrs. Dora Webb and one other member of the Ohio delegation were omitted for the reason, no doubt, that the secretaries failed to hear the response. They both voted yea. Mrs. Helen Shay, also of Ohio, was not in the Convention that afternoon, but was recorded as voting yea, which she would have done, she states, had she been present.

IN the sudden death of the Rev. J. M. Strong, of Waukegan, Ill., the W. C. T. U. loses a warm friend. For many years pastor of the Congregational church of that place, his pulpit and his home were always open to white-ribbon workers. Indeed, he was one of those great souls "given to hospitality" toward ideas as well as to the holders of ideas. He always took an active interest in the Lake Bluff Temperance Convocation, and was often upon the program of those meetings.

OUR white-ribbon forces in Wisconsin are to be congratulated upon the accession to their ranks of the Rev. and Mrs. J. M. A. Spence, formerly of Winnipeg, Canada. Mr. Spence has been called to the pastorate of the Congregational church at Green Bay. This good brother took an active part in the plebiscite campaign in Manitoba, serving as secretary of the executive committee for the province, while Mrs. Spence was provincial superintendent of junior work, and afterward of literature for the W. C. T. U.

AMONG the local and field workers who have been interesting and interested callers at Headquarters since Convention, are Mrs. Laura Thomas Carter, president of the union of unions at Los Angeles, Cal., who has been traveling in Canada and the East for the past five months, and was en route to her home accompanied by her husband; Mrs. W. A. Lawson, state corresponding secretary of Wisconsin; Mrs. Arella Phillips, of St. Paul, and Mrs. Addie Northam Fields, who was the recipient of many cordial good wishes for her success in Bermuda, whither she goes immediately.

Y Conference—Queensland Colonial Convention.

THE Y conference proved one of the most enjoyable features of the Queensland convention. It took place in open convention and there was a good attendance of young people who were given the front seats. Mrs. Carvosso, colonial Y organizer, presided, and was presented with a beautiful white floral Y tied with white ribbons as a token of love and loyalty from the girls.

Only Y's were allowed to speak and the hearty discussions that took place after the different papers showed that they are thoroughly in earnest with their work. The conference began with "Beautiful Thoughts," given by several girls and sent from Y's at Maryborough. Miss Brentnall read Mrs. E. B. Harris' report as Colonial Y superintendent, and spoke of the Y almanacs for next year. "The Last Milestone" was sung, and the paper, "Y principles, How to keep and teach them," by Miss Ferguson, Maryborough, was read. She urged the necessity of living up to our principles and always being persistent. Miss Hussey, Bundaberg, gave a paper on "Mercy," dealing particularly with the cruelty of wearing adornments once worn with grace and beauty by a murdered bird. "How to make Y union popular," by Miss Daniell, Gympie. She spoke of the need of enthusiasm and a thorough belief in our work. "New methods for old work," by Miss Grimes, Brisbane, recommended us never to lose any opportunity for doing good, small or great.

They were all good papers, full of helpful ideas, and the remarks from the girls upon them were bright and to the point.

"Model Officers," by Miss Jane Brisbane, gave, as the keynote, "Consecrated Enthusiasm," punctuality and faithful prayer that "God may give the increase."

"Encouragements," from a Maryborough honorary member was especially appreciated by the girls. He encouraged them to continue their work, and not to feel discouraged if their personal efforts with brothers and friends were only ridiculed, for men were really grateful for interest taken in them, and with perseverance would often be won. It was through this wonderful influence and power that girls could do so much if they only exerted it for good, and not for vain or selfish ends.

Miss Hussey spoke of efforts in Bundaberg made for young men who were giving way to temptations and threatened with losing their positions, who, by letters sent, were saved from their downward course.

Greetings were read from different Y unions, votes of thanks passed to all who had helped to make the conference a success, and Mrs. Carvosso pronounced the benediction.

Y's at Work.

NEW YORK.

AT the St. Paul Convention, New York state received the banner for greatest increase in membership, the number added to our ranks during the past year being 255. Total number of "paid up" Y's in the state 1,010. Though the banner was received by the present secretary, it must be said that the results presented in this year's report are largely due to the efforts of Mrs. Boole, who was forced to vacate the position of secretary in the middle of the year, owing to stress of other duties through the death of our state president, Mrs. Burt. The present incumbent being appointed to fill her place for the remaining months, was afterward duly elected at state convention.

Twenty new unions have been organized during the past year and six Y Branches. Thirty-seven counties have Y secretaries, and the remaining twenty-three counties will probably do something in the matter during the coming year, for Y work has had a big boom in New York state, and older workers realize the importance of appealing to, and training the young women for the duties of our bloodless warfare as never before.

Special efforts have been made to present our work to young people's societies, Sabbath-schools and colleges. Much good has been accomplished in this line, and Syracuse University boasts a Somerset Y in consequence, while efforts are making to reach other educational institutions in this way.

New York Y's also contributed the largest amount of money to the Clara Parrish Fund, namely, eighty-three dollars, and though we rejoice that she is now on the "home stretch" we know our efforts in this respect must not fall off, and we hope to make a goodly showing in the next few months. One hundred and seventy-five almanacs were sold at our state convention, and so vigorously has the sale been prosecuted privately since then that our almanac custodian, Mrs. Yarnall, informs us that the edition is exhausted. Our Y's are studying, department work more thoroughly, and at our conferences during state convention several of our state superintendents addressed the young women on their special lines of work, affording us fresh information and added interest in those departments. This is to be carried on in our local unions where practicable, the W superintendents, who are older in the work, assisting the Y's by these talks and suggestions.

At almost all our county conventions Y hour and, in several instances Y evening as accorded our young women, have been pronounced successes. This, we know, has served to draw us nearer together in the work. The girls have gained the inspiration of convention atmosphere, and an added impetus to their labor of love.

We are planning great things for 1899, and ere the dawn of a new century greets us, we trust to carry up to old "Mother National" as fair and promising a record as any the Y. W. C. T. U. of the "empire" state has ever known.

World's W. C. T. U.

Queensland.

THE Thirteenth Annual Colonial Convention was this year held in the Wharf Street Congregational Church, which looked a cool and restful spot to those coming in from the city streets. There was a large delegation from unions all over the colony, some being quite new to conventions, showing Brisbane people what enthusiastic workers we have in far distant places.

Convention commenced with a colonial executive in the morning, praise and prayer meeting in the afternoon and a very pleasant welcome at night, when representatives from temperance societies, council of the churches, Christian Endeavor, and district unions spoke words of kindly welcome. Mrs. Brentnall not being able to attend through ill health, Mrs. Carvosso presided. Business sessions were presided over by district presidents. Reports from different parts of the colony showed steady work by the unions, some having difficulty in continuing, and all working according to the needs of their district. Some departments are worked by nearly all unions, as flower missions, hospital visitation, tract distribution, and mothers' meetings. Agricultural shows is a department very much in evidence, which always proves a success in every way. Strangers on trains have spoken to white-ribboners of how much men appreciate temperance booths at encampments and shows, and how the public hopes they "have come to stay."

Franchise is another department that has made rapid strides during the year. Members are in full sympathy and object to the common excuse that "women do not want the franchise." Splendid meetings have been held in the north, when the audiences have been most enthusiastic, even in far-away "out west" towns. At Charters Towers the meeting was especially good, the mayor presiding and two members of Parliament making addresses. A resolution was unanimously passed that the franchise ought to be extended to women. A delegation of our women at Rockhampton waited upon the state Premier, when touring in the north, asking for this. The franchise conference of convention was very good, the speakers receiving most hearty applause. Messrs. J. G. Drake and C. M. Jenkinson, members of the legislative assembly, came to give us hints on how to hasten the time of woman suffrage. They said that if the question was put to the country, an overwhelming majority would be in favor, and the same in our House. No electoral bill comes before the House without including women, and when we have done our part arousing public interest and educating people on the subject, they would be more than ready to do their little share in bestowing the franchise. At the deputation from the Temperance Alliance, Mr. Jackson, M. L. A., spoke strongly for woman suffrage.

There were conferences of officers, evangelistic organization, mothers and the Y's, with encouragements from Australasian superintendents, all being most helpful and interesting. The Y conference was enjoyed by the W's as well as the girls; Mrs. Carvosso presided as Y organizer and district superintendent, and there was a large attendance of young people, who took part in the hearty discussions.

There was also a conference for secretaries and treasurers, and encouragements from presidents; white-ribbon testimonies were also helpful, showing how the W. C. T. U. broadens our views of life. After the report of prison work and police matrons, a letter from Mrs. J. K. Barney was read, and a dainty silk stars and stripes, sent by her, was received with enthusiasm, convention standing, for we white-ribboners think a deal of your flag, as we always remember that it was America sent us our W. C. T. U.

Besides the departments of unfermented wine, Sabbath observance, Sunday-schools, peace, narcotics, Christian citizenship, systematic giving, etc., different unions have outside work, according to the needs of their districts.

Valley union, Brisbane, has a well organized benevolent society which has assisted one hundred and fifty-two families during the year with food, rent, clothing, blankets, firewood, and paid the weekly installment on sewing machines in cases where they were used for the support of the family. Maryborough, Gympie, Bundaberg and Warwick help with the local benevolent societies. Charters Towers never uses union funds for benevolent work, but helps those in distress by voluntary subscriptions and thinks of starting a benevolent society in their union. They helped to canvass their town for funds for the Prisoners' Aid Home at Townsville. Clermont gives food, clothing and monetary help to lessen the burden of those who find life a hard struggle. They are greatly assisted in this work by their honoraries, of whom there are seventy-two; about three times as many as active members. They do a good work among the men, some of them far removed from home influences and their efforts are thoroughly appreciated. The honoraries take part in the weekly meetings, wishing they were oftener, and paid the expenses for their president to come to convention. Most of the unions make garments for hospital patients, for needy families or mothers, whom sickness has prevented from sewing for the family. Corinda has a helping hand fund and Ithaca a nursing staff. Unions also send Christmas cheer to hospitals, asylums, orphanages and the Lazarette.

Evangelistic meetings have been held in cottages, churches, and hotels, where Mrs. Cole, evangelist, visits and speaks to the people and is doing a good work. We also have Mrs. Ross as evangelist for the North, for Queensland covers a large area and the population in distant parts is very scattered. Barmaids is another of our departments. In America there are no women to serve in bars but in Queensland it is far from uncommon.

Loyal Temperance Legions are worked by unions in different parts of the colony, and with medal contests and scientific temperance instruction in day and Sunday-schools. Wherever possible the children are being taught that alcohol is a foe to be dreaded.

At the election of officers Mrs. F. T. Brentnall was re-elected president, Mrs. Bryce, treasurer, and Mrs. Trundle, recording secretary, Mrs. Williams not wishing to stand again. Mrs. Carvosso was not allowed her wish to give up the work of corresponding secretary, which she has held for nine years, but was re-elected by a unanimous vote. She is so thoroughly interested in the work, so energetic and tireless, and looked up to by workers everywhere, that it would be impossible to find any one to fill her place. All the officers were presented with floral tributes, and during the last afternoon a contingent of Blue Jackets brought Mrs. Brentnall an anchor of red, white and blue flowers.

The sailors' mission reported 6,018 men visiting the rooms during the year, while 420 signed the pledge. Brisbane unions help in every way at this mission, and country unions send monetary assistance.

The prize for largest amount collected on literature card was won by the Corinda W. C. T. U. These cards are a means of helping unions to provide literature for themselves and in assisting that Colonial department, as two-thirds is returned in literature, and one-third kept to help the expenses of the literature department. The prize this year was "The Beautiful Life of Frances E. Willard."

The first evening public meeting was a lecture on "Frances Willard," by Rev. J. Nairn, who spoke of our leader's childhood, home-life and work for humanity, which made her the best loved woman in the world.

Friday evening there was a young people's entertainment in Willard hall, Mr. C. M. Jenkinson, M. L. A., in the chair. He urged young people starting in life to be abstainers, and gave helpful advice. The Legion children entertained with marching songs, recitations and dialogues, acquitting themselves well. The Willard Legion only started a few months ago, made a specially good appearance.

Saturday evening there was a public meeting by Valley union and Temperance Alliance. Monday night was the gold medal contest, the first held in Queensland, so was especially interesting, a temperance rally Tuesday evening, and franchise meeting the last evening made the last meeting of convention, but I must speak of them next time or I shall be taking more space than is allowed to each colony.

Sunday evening Rev. Hugh Jones, in whose church convention was held, preached on "Woman to the Fore," and spoke strongly for our W. C. T. U. in all its branches of work, making special mention of purity and franchise. The officers were pleased to lend the church, and made several concessions that were appreciated by our convention.

THE Provincial W. C. T. U. convention of Nova Scotia was held in Amherst, October 5 to 7, inclusive. Miss Edna Wile, a missionary lately returned from India, where she has been closely identified with W. C. T. U. work, was present, and made her part on the program very interesting. Miss Belle Bartlett, the railway evangelist, so well known to all maritime white-ribboners, was also present. By arrangement, the Emerald Quartet, a band of temperance singing evangelists, who had been doing good work in several towns in the province in the interests of the plebiscite, was also present. All the members of this quartet belong to the W. C. T. U., and the very successful meetings which they have held both before and since the plebiscite have been under the auspices of the local unions. Through the efforts of Mr. and Mrs. J. Parsons Smith, the leaders of the quartet, several of the unions have been strengthened by the addition of new members, and as far as heard from, two new unions have been organized.

The provincial corresponding secretary's report showed a very creditable amount of work done by the unions, particularly in connection with the plebiscite.

An interesting school of methods was held on the afternoon of the 6th, conducted by Mrs. Trites Sackville. Excellent papers on "The Work of Mothers' Meetings" and "Social Purity" were read and discussed.

A tea furnished by the Amherst union in the bright and cheerful dining room of the Baptist church was the social feature of the convention, and was most enjoyable. Three public meetings were held, the attendance increasing at each successive meeting. At the last, which was a memorial service to our dear promoted leader, the capacious Methodist church was filled to its utmost seating capacity. The speakers were the provincial president and corresponding secretary, Mrs. S. H. Black, who read an address written by Mrs. Charles Archibald, who was prevented from coming to this meeting. Miss Wile also spoke for the W. C. T. U. sisters of India. Appropriate music was rendered by the Emerald Quartette.

The following resolution in regard to the plebiscite was unanimously passed, and afterward forwarded to Mr. F. S. Spence, Secretary Dominion Alliance:

Enameline is the Modern Stove Polish, because it has all the latest improvements. A brilliant polish is produced without labor, dust or odor. There are three styles of package—paste, cake or liquid. Get the genuine.

J. L. PRESCOTT & CO., New York.

Resolved, That we, the members of the W. C. T. U. in convention assembled, grateful for the substantial majority vote in favor of prohibition, hereby demand the fulfillment of the promise made by the Premier of Canada, viz., "that a prohibitory law would be enacted whenever the electorate of Canada by popular vote expressed their wish for it.

An animated discussion on the subject of equal suffrage took place over the resolution.

WHEREAS, We believe that sex should be no bar to citizenship, and that God's intentions concerning women must be measured by the capability with which He has endowed her. And

WHEREAS, He has provided her with all the qualifications needed to make an intelligent voter. Therefore

Resolved, That we will not cease to agitate for full parliamentary suffrage for the women of Nova Scotia.

After full discussion and with the understanding that action was to be taken during the coming year, this resolution was almost unanimously carried. The election of officers resulted in the return to office of the four general officers and the election of new vice-presidents.

The convention was gratified to receive invitations for the next three years so that according to present arrangements we will meet in Wolfville in 1899, in Sydney, 1900, and in Picton 1901. On October 8, the delegates left for their several destinations, carrying with them very pleasant memories of the kindness of the Amherst friends.

Summerside, P. E. I., W. C. T. U. gave a pleasant and appreciative social entertainment to the Bedeque and Kinsington unions on Thanksgiving day. Everybody was made to feel at home and a program of special interest was instructively given. Mrs. C. W. Strong, the Provincial president, has been laid aside for some months with prostration from overwork. Mrs. Strong has been indefatigable in W. C. T. U. work, but was overpowered at last. We are grateful, however, that God is giving our much-loved president back to us again and we hope to stand by her more zealously in the future.

California.

THERE is something finely appropriate in the happy choice of names that gave to our most characteristic college town the name of that venerated lover of learning, Bishop Berkeley. Lying upon the gentle slopes, its outlook is away through the Golden Gate toward the sunset, just as its intellectual outlook seems so far-reaching. Only across the beautiful bay is the surging, whirling busy life of the great city of the coast, San Francisco, but Berkeley is a place apart, so near and yet so far removed from the madding crowd—an ideal place for a convention. Fancy a town of 15,000 people without hotels or restaurants, a saloon or police court. Such is Berkeley, but 159 families take boarders, and the lovely esthetic homes are graciously hospitable.

The convention was warmly welcomed by the city fathers, the churches, the schools, the university, and the W. C. T. U. on the first evening, the business beginning next morning. The First Presbyterian Church was the busy scene of an activity new to itself. Every morning at eight o'clock there was a prayer meeting in the pastor's study, conducted by the state evangelists, which pitched the key for the day's proceedings, and from that time until a late evening hour the work of convention never flagged for four days. The mornings were occupied with reports, beginning with the secretaries. That of the recording secretary showed the faithful work of the executive committee. The corresponding secretary reported for the whole membership, a gratifying record of devotion to the cause. A curious anomaly is a falling off in the number of unions and an increase of membership. Unions reported more than twice as much money used for local work as in the year before, also an increased attention to methods. The treasurer brought in a clean balance sheet, notwithstanding the state had suffered a dry year and short crops.

Mrs. Van Lennep, president of Placer county, gave a valuable paper on "How to help the work individually," and Mrs. Wheeler, president of Sonoma county, told "How to help financially." Miss Severance, superintendent of franchise, had a most instructive hour under the head of "First Class in Civil Rights," in which she drilled a class of about ten women in most approved school teaching style, upon the subject in hand, and what the "Hour requires for franchise work." There can be nothing more effective than this normal class teaching. The audience manifested the highest approval.

The annual address of the state president, Mrs. Sturtevant-Peet, was a document full of suggestion. Her eye is upon every phase of the work, and her thought forecasts its shape. The clergyman's hour was filled by four prominent divines, who handled the subjects assigned them vigorously. Rev. W. W. Scudder gave a most thoughtful address on "Which is more responsible, the church or state, for the status of temperance." Dr. Wilson told "Why temperance should be incorporated in church department work," and Dr. Coyle tried to tell "If the church is strong enough, why does it not banish the saloon."

The evening of Tuesday was given to a historic program, a gem in its way—beginning with devotions by Mrs. E. G. Greene. A solo by our Mrs. Bailey, whose selections besides being of the highest musical character, are always appropriate to the special occasion. Miss Severance talked even better than ever on retrospection. Mrs. R. A. Emmons touched everybody with her "Personal Incidents" and Mrs. M. C. Lord in her "Reality" presented the W. C. T. U. and its work of twenty-five years before the mind's eye, like a stately procession of goodly deeds and great achievements. Some one said, "Those women talked as if they were inspired." They were, by the greatness of their theme. And then Mrs. Eyster let the audience gently down by a delightful poem, "The home that Jill built."

On Wednesday came the election which was a re-election of the entire staff of general officers, followed by a very beautiful praise service, conducted by Mrs. M. C. Lord.

The finance committee presented their work and their claims so well as to secure pledges for several hundred dollars for the coming year. Mrs. R. R. Johnson gave a clear history of the canteen. The superintendents of Sunday-school, juvenile and physical culture gave excellent papers on their respective departments. Dr. Chapman, superintendent of the Anti-saloon League, presented that work in the evening.

Thursday morning was assigned to the consideration of the state paper, The Pacific Ensign, and the stockholders' meeting was something out of the usual line, in convention, but quite in place, as none but members of the W. C. T. U. may own the stock. Our women have acquired valuable experience and learned business methods through this means. Year by year such changes as may be required are made, and the work of the year fully discussed. Reports showed the paper out of debt, a fact largely due to the sacrificing work of those who are carrying it on.

A special feature of the afternoon was a "Platform Exercise," prepared and conducted by the president. It is hoped that she will soon have it published, for there is not a union that would not profit by giving it.

By way of recreation the DeKoven club gave a concert that evening. On Friday reports of departments continue to follow in rapid succession. A free parliament on Christian citizenship and several fine papers, as well as the resolutions, all good in themselves, but probably about what all the other conventions had passed. Delegates to the National were instructed to stand by the National Officers in their attitude toward the Temple.

The president was presented with a purse, raised for the purpose to defray her expenses to the National Convention, as a tribute of affection and a duty our people owed to the general work.

A successful Demonstration Night closed the week's work. The state flag was awarded to Sacramento county for largest increase of membership. The Demorest medal banner went to Fresno county for the best work in that line, and Santa Clara county took the lovely department banner for mothers' meetings. These two and the Tri-county earned the honor of county songs by new members added.

Altogether, the convention presents a most encouraging review and bright prospects. The greater number of superintendents are continued; some few new ones, whose fitness has been proven in county work, have been added. Our superintendent of press, Mrs. Clare O. Southard, has done so well in her department that the duty of state reporter has also been assigned her. I most cordially commend her as my successor, and trust the office may bring her in its labor of love as many pleasant associations as I have derived from it.

BALATON union entertained the county convention at its last session, with one hundred delegates and visitors. Later the union sent a large box to Minnesota soldier boys at Chickamauga Park, containing a bolt of muslin made into sheets, pillow slips and pajamas. Sixty-four comfort bags were well filled, and there were bandages, old linen, jelly, malted milk and literature. Many, not members of the union, were glad to assist in this work. When the annual election of officers was held, after the business was disposed of, a delicious repast was served, to which the honoraries were invited. Mrs. Bruun visited the town and later Mrs. Addie N. Fields. The latter addressed the children in the public schools, and in a union meeting of the Junior League and Christian Endeavor. Mrs. Fields also gave two evening addresses with large audiences and good collections, and conducted a mothers' meeting at which twenty-five were present.

Work throughout Lyon county received valuable aid from the labors of Mrs. Fields. Besides that at Balaton, she visited Cottonwood, Minnesota, Green Valley, Marshall, Lynd, Russell, Florence, Tracy, Amiret and Custer, giving one or two addresses and especially reaching the children, among whom Mrs. Fields' greatest efforts are made. Several L. T. L's resulted from her work, while the unions themselves were greatly strengthened, large parlor and mothers' meetings being held in many places. Mrs. Bruun's work among the Scandinavians in this county has also been very helpful.

Mrs. Skelton's visit to Lake City was much appreciated. Her illustrated lecture upon Uncle Sam was pronounced excellent and cannot fail to do good.

Edgerton union has had visits from Mrs. Fields and Miss Hollister, and hopes to take up L. T. L. work after the holidays. Both ladies found a cordial supporter in Mrs. Rose Meacham, local and county superintendent of Sabbath-school work.

Hastings union feels much encouraged, having had new accessions to the membership, and new interest therewith. New lines of work are being taken up as fast as persons can be found to take charge. It has been decided that each officer and superintendent shall be held responsible for one entertainment representing her line of work. Mrs. Ellen Blair, of Nebraska, has been with the union one day, and gave a chalk talk in the Baptist church. There was a very good audience, mostly children, as Mrs. Blair had visited all the schools during the day and interested them. At the close of the talk a Loyal Temperance Legion was organized.

Hennepin county held its semi-annual convention in Lake Street M. E. Church, Minneapolis, early in November. A debate on the curfew ordinance proved very interesting. Of course the negative side summed up all the arguments possible, but when she was defeated took it with such good grace that even an "outsider" might have suspected that her arguments and her real sentiments were at variance. And the same was true of the negatives in the suffrage debate in the afternoon. Nevertheless the debates served to furnish no end of merriment, and also to keep the real arguments fresh in the minds of the workers. Mrs. Clark, state superintendent of purity, gave a talk upon that subject, urging the appointment of local superintendents. Mrs. Ella F. Hendrix spoke for THE UNION SIGNAL and the White-ribboner. The program for the use of local unions will be published in the state paper, which Mrs. Hendrix urged as a special reason for taking that. Rev. Mr. Shannon, pastor of the church, gave a Bible reading and an inspiring talk touching upon the foundation principles of the W. C. T. U. The army canteen was spoken of by Miss L. M. Hollister. "Through congress, not through the president, must we hope for the abolition of this evil." Rev. Mr. Shannon also made a few remarks upon the same subject, calling attention to the English army in the Soudan, which is a testimonial for total abstinence simply unanswerable. An original poem upon Frances Willard, by Mrs. Mills, and a paper on "The value of little things," by Miss A. A. Connor, were part of the afternoon program, the latter followed by brief remarks from several ladies emphasizing what Miss Connor had said. The subject of a city W. C. T. U. missionary was freely discussed, then left to a committee which has since voted to employ Mrs. M. L. Clark in that capacity.

November 20 and 27 were both observed in this city as temperance Sabbath, some churches using one and some the other. At Stewart Memorial church (Presbyterian), the pastor, Rev. R. K. Porter, preached a most excellent temperance sermon in the morning. Franklin Avenue M. E. church held an evening temperance service, and at Park Avenue M. E. church, the pastor, Rev. John Powell, preached in the evening upon temperance.

Since the National Convention Mrs. Helen Bullock, of New York, has spent a week in this city. A real old-fashioned Minnesota blizzard, such as we have not had for several years, paralyzed the street cars and almost every other kind of conveyance, so that two evenings the meetings planned for Mrs. Bullock could not be held, but the rest of the time was fully occupied, and as a result one hundred and twenty-five members have been secured in various parts of the city. Mrs. Bullock's manner is very happy, and her speech convincing. Then, too, she has business-like methods for gathering the harvest.

The National has come and gone, but the results will go on, who may say how long? Everybody was interested and the papers gave fine reports. Of course Minnesota is gratified at the choice of Mrs. Fry for corresponding secretary. We know she is worthy, for we had her for state president three years, and her work then endeared her to us all. She is still "ours" though her field of action has changed. God bless her and all our officers, and make it a fruitful year.

Parlor Meetings.

"When anything is done
People see not the patient doing of it;
Nor think how great would be the loss to man
If it had not been done."

We cannot too highly magnify this department. For twelve years your superintendent has studied its various phases and still there is much to learn. It is the attractive, beautiful, comprehensive all around study of our grand organization which can be better expressed by quoting from one of the California women: "If the women of the United States could grasp the power that lies in social life and work, the temperance cause would be placed where it should be, in the very heart of home life."

The woman interested and engaged in parlor socials can never be a woman of one idea, for she will wish to be informed on every department that she may utilize them to good advantage in making up her program. I do entreat every state president (through this column as well as through personal letters which have been or will be sent to each one) to push the work in their states by electing a superintendent, if they have not already done so. Where they are elected, grand work is being accomplished by them, and we look for grander results this year than ever before.

Such statements as the following come to me: "We hold parlor meetings in our state. I spoke in forty." Yet no record is kept of those the president did not attend, nor the umber of members gained. "We cannot afford to elect a superintendent, for we should have to give her an appropriation." From past records the members gained by this method, financially speaking, would more than recompense for the small amounts given by the states to the superintendents of this department. Each member pays her annual dues, which is, at least, fifty cents. The local union gives, probably, thirty cents of this for National, state and county dues, so that twenty cents remain in the treasury, and if twenty-five members are gained the union will be richer by five dollars. Should one hundred members be added to the state (which is a small number), the state would be entitled to ten dollars. Multiply this ten dollars by our fifty-seven National divisions of states and territories and the National treasurer would have five hundred and seventy dollars more each year, and while she loves to have a full treasury, I think she would agree with us, that money is the least consideration. I have merely stated these facts that our state officers might see the necessity of promoting the work through the only proper channel in this, as in other departments, by the superintendent. In no other way can we reach the minds and consciences of many of the bright women in our cities, villages, and rural districts, whom we are desiring for our unions.

I am hopeful that my wishes may be realized this year. Unions are using my little booklet, "Why we belong," to which I referred in my previous article in THE UNION SIGNAL of October 13. I am preparing another help, which I trust will be ready in January. The latter leaflet can be obtained through your state superintendents. Let each union have the satisfaction of the "well done because of having done well."

Yours in the fond wish that we may secure at least 1,000 new members this year by our Parlor Meeting department.

Non-Alcoholic Medication.

The promised leaflet upon "The Danger and Harmfulness of Patent Medicines," is at last ready, and is being sent out to state superintendents of this department as rapidly as possible. It is hoped that every local union will soon receive a copy, and use it for study and discussion. Extra copies for distribution will be supplied at sixty cents a hundred, postpaid. Superintendents, or local presidents, can prepare a most interesting program with this leaflet, as it can easily be divided into two readings. Discussion should follow. A very attractive feature for a convention program would be a "Quiz" prepared from this leaflet and "Safe Remedies."

A new Plan of Work will be issued in January, one copy of which will go to each local union, if every woman entrusted with a package is careful to forward to her constituency. Together with the Plan of Work will be sent "Doctors and Alcohol," a brief report of a discussion upon alcohol as medicine, held at the last meeting of the New York State Medical Society. The doctors, reported as participating, spoke in strongest terms against alcohol, even stating that it is no longer needed in pharmacy. This leaflet costs only ten cents a hundred, postpaid, so should be circulated everywhere, as it is one of the greatest helps to total abstinence ever put into print. Any union ordering one hundred copies each of "Is Alcohol Useful or Necessary as Medicine?" fifty cents per hundred, and "Safe Remedies in Illness," eighty-five cents per hundred, will receive gratis two hundred copies of "Doctors and Alcohol."

A "Railroad Emergencies" leaflet has been prepared by Dr. Myra A. Gillette, one of the National lecturers for this department. Some railroad men sent a request for such a help. It costs only twenty-five cents a hundred, postpaid. Workers among railroad men should see that they are supplied with this leaflet. Alcohol is the great resort in emergencies; let us help to a better way.

Physicians sometimes write me that they are amazed at the indifference of our organization to the medical aspect of the temperance question. It has been hard for the non-alcoholic doctor in days gone by, and still is in some places. People cling so to alcohol that they will refuse to employ a physician who does not use it. Hence, there are many physicians using little or no alcohol in their practice who hesitate to say so because of the ignorance and prejudice of the people. It is only physicians of independent position, or of exceptional conscientiousness, who dare openly oppose alcohol in some sections.

We have it in our power as an organization to drive alcohol out of the medicine chests of this country. We have at our command the means for enlightening the people. Shall we use the means? We can begin by studying the leaflets and pamphlets prepared for this department, familiarizing ourselves with the arguments against alcohol. We can bring outsiders to the meetings of our unions where this subject is presented; we can talk to our neighbors of what we have learned; we can distribute department leaflets from house to house, and enclose them in our letters; we can furnish matter to the press on this line; we can write brief, kindly letters to physicians, enclosing department leaflets, asking their opinion of them; we can pray for the blessing of God upon the spoken or printed word of truth on this matter.

Please note my change of address, which is due to the fact that I share the fortunes of an M. E. minister.

CATARRH OF THE STOMACH.
A Pleasant, Simple, but Safe and Effectual Cure for It.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs, and difficult breathing; headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue, and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do, and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlandson the safest and best treatment is to use, after each meal, a tablet composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal, and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drug stores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthy appetite and thorough digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher, of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition, resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach, thus producing catarrh of the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure; but to-day I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I can not find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book mailed free on stomach troubles, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. The tablets can be found at all drug stores.

Cor. Secy's Notes.

DEAR SISTERS: — The blessed Christmas time is approaching, and I pause in the everyday work to send a pleasant word of greeting to the members of the largest organization of women in the world, the W. C. T. U. It warms my heart when I remember that it is a part of our thought to emphasize "for others" rather than "for self" at this time. Our dear departed one had this much in her thought of late years, and put it on record that she would avoid the display of costly presents, and would discourage the making of gifts as a mere conventional form.

I recall a conversation between two women on a train at this time last year, which will serve to illustrate this point. One of them was discussing the cost of the gifts given to her the year before, and conjuring how she could appear to return an apparent equivalent at a less expenditure of money, lamenting the necessity of making any return at all, and yet anxious to outdo, if possible, her so-called friend. It would be well for us to go back to the Christ spirit in the matter of gifts. The thought of a gift is beautiful. It is the basic principle in the coming of Christ on earth. He gave Himself for us. Primitive gift-making had in it the idea of helpfulness and of giving one's self. To give useful things, needed things, or, simple tokens of love has almost fallen out of the lives of men and women in these days, but it is being revived again through the Kindergarten training. Froebel had the Christ idea. It would do us all good at this season of the year to read the myths of St. Christopher, of Santa Claus, and other similar ones, and above all to dwell upon the life of Christ

German home life might teach us many things. It warms our hearts, and almost makes the tears come, when we think how much pleasure the German child has and how much she bestows when she carries a little basket of potatoes as a gift, or a paper decoration for a Christmas tree, or a sheep or donkey carved by herself. Things useful, things needed and to those who do not need, something that says, "I love you" instead of "See how much I cost" would make the world happier and better. Another comforting thought comes, in that all can give a helpful, kind, pleasant word and souls are hungry for such.

What might the holidays do for our people who are consumed by the saloon? What might they do for those who are engaged in the traffic of liquor? Where can you speak a word, dear sister, which will mean far more in the lives of men and women than would a rich and costly gift? Where can you speak a word which would make for prohibition, which would help to close our "chamber of horrors," which would help to give us a government "of the people, for the people and by the people," which we do not now have, largely because of the products of the saloon? Speak it in the Christ spirit.

Yours for a Christmas redeemed from drunkenness, murder, debauchery of characters and souls through the rum traffic,

SUSANNA M. D. FRY.

RED-LETTER DAY.

MOTHERS' DAY.—January 3.

The birthday of Madam Willard.

ATTENTION!

Will white-ribboners please take notice (1) that the price of the National Minutes for 1898 is fifteen cents per copy, (2) that the price of the Annual Leaflet is fifty cents per hundred, and (3) that orders for both must be sent to Mrs. Helen M. Barker, The Temple, Chicago.

Notes and Comments.

THE date of the next National Convention, to be held in Seattle, Wash., has been fixed by the General Officers as October 20–25.

BE sure and read our Prospectus on page 15. Time and space would fail us to tell of all the good things THE UNION SIGNAL has in store for its readers the coming year. But we enumerate enough to whet the appetite and give them the pleasure of anticipation.

NEW YEAR'S greetings to our home folks—the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL! May the year we are entering upon be the happiest and most fruitful of any yet recorded—a foretaste of the golden years which the golden rule of Christ will bring "some glad day."

THE UNION SIGNAL is only fifty cents a year to ministers. Will not every local union this new year—the last of the century—resolve that they will put it into the home of every pastor in their community? Experience proves that seed thus sown brings forth sixty and a hundredfold. Get the pastors interested, and a great accession in numbers and power to the local union is the result.

MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, who has been at National Headquarters every day since the Convention, returned to her home in Portland, Me., for the holidays. She will probable remain there several weeks. Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman, who has been superintending the publication of the National Minutes, also left for her home in Kansas City a few days before Christmas.

THE holiday sale for the benefit of the Frances E. Willard National Temperance Hospital lasted four days, beginning December 7. Those in charge were not able to secure a very desirable location, consequently the sales were not so satisfactory as last year. However, when receipts are all in, quite a snug little sum will be realized, and the hospital board desires, through THE UNION SIGNAL, to heartily thank all who in any way aided their efforts.

APROPOS of the suggestion offered by "An Occasional Drinker" in our Correspondence columns of December 15, one of our good brother helpers who signs himself "A Total Abstainer," thus pertinently comments: "Dear lady readers, instead of trying to get your 'gentleman' friends to quit treating, get them to quit drinking. Try this plan, and I will guarantee a more satisfactory result." So say we, but if a man won't stop putting the bottle to his own mouth the next best thing is to get him to stop putting it to his neighbor's mouth.

CHRISTIAN citizens everywhere should give real Christmas honors to Christ, the King, by seeking to make His laws the laws of society. To that end, let individuals and deputations from churches and Christian societies, especially preachers' meetings, call on Senators and Congressmen while they are at home for the holidays, and urge them to aid these four reform movements—the Ellis anti-canteen bill, the Hepburn anti-prize-fight bill, the protests against the repeal of prohibition in Alaska, and against the admission of Utah's polygamous congressman. As train-loads of people visited candidate McKinley in the interest of "sound money" from hundreds of miles away, let us be willing, a few of us, to go to the next street, or the next town, to enlist our Congressman actively on the side of sound morals.

WHILE much might be said as to the propriety, or impropriety of men engaging in a six-day bicycle race, it is interesting to note, in connection with such an event recently held in New York city, the habits of the racers and their relative powers of endurance. A more severe test of physical strength can hardly be conceived. It is one which requires every nerve and muscle to be in perfect condition, and the general constitution to be almost flawless. The race was won by Charles W. Miller, of Chicago, who rode 2,007 miles in six days and nights, having in that time but little over nine hours of sleep. Miller is a total abstainer, does not use tobacco, and during the race subsisted chiefly upon fruits, grains, milk and beef extract, meat and vegetables being tabooed. He came out of the race in excellent condition, while the man whom he had considered his strongest opponent, a Swiss rider who drank wine freely, dropped out at the end of the fourth day. Waller, who took second place, is also an abstainer. A more forcible demonstration of the value of plain living as a sine qua non for physical endurance as well as for "high thinking," and the utter futility of alcoholic stimulants to "brace a man up," will hardly be needed by the athletic fraternity or anybody else.

ON the first day after the treaty of peace was signed, Christian citizens met in national convention at Washington—on time for once—to consider the numerous moral issues raised by the war. The call for this convention was signed by the representatives of eleven great reform societies. In the addresses it was taken for granted that Providence has settled the question of expansion and the President's words, "Duty determines destiny," were the background of the convention from the very start. The speakers did not confine the discussion of "our new problems" to the convention, but a score or so of the leaders besieged Congress, and had a hearing before the house committee on territories, at which time strong arguments were made in opposition to the proposed repeal of prohibition in Alaska. It was urged by Dr. Crafts—who is known as "speaker of the third house"—(1) that at the very least, the repeal provision should not go into the pending bill, already passed by the Senate, to provide for a better government for Alaska, lest the whole bill should be lost in the battle over this amendment which has mighty foes in the Senate; (2) that even to justify repeal, prohibition should be tried under the new government bill, there having been no real effort to enforce it hitherto; (3) that to substitute high license would not only be wrong in principle but useless as a remedy. The nation that has just sunk the whole Spanish navy, it was said, should not haul down its flag to the whisky smugglers of Alaska. The conference was held in the First Presbyterian church, of which the Rev. Dr. Talmage is pastor. It was a notable gathering, and one of its immediate notable results is the formation of a national federation of moral forces to promote coöperation in Christian reforms. An interesting report of the meeting is given on page 2, by our special correspondent.

The National Christian Citizenship Convention.

[Special Correspondence.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 18, 1898:—The convention held in this city December 13-16, 1898, called together a galaxy of talented speakers and representatives of all moral reforms.

The first meeting opened Tuesday evening. Hon. Nelson Dingley presiding. Rev. Frank A. Bristol, a pupil and pastor of Miss Frances E. Willard, and Rev. Josiah Strong, D. D., were the principal speakers.

Wednesday morning the topics upon the program were "Suffrage" and "Civil Service." Mr. S. M. Cooper presided, and presented an address upon "True Manhood Suffrage for Our New Islands and for Ourselves." White-ribboners were well represented in the conference, and members of the local W. C. T. U. acted as ushers.

In the afternoon Rev. Byron Sunderland presided. This aged divine was Mrs. Cleveland's pastor, and performed the marriage ceremony that made her the wife of a President of the United States. The Scripture lesson was from the second Psalm: "I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy [new] possessions."

Rev. Dr. McAllister, of Pittsburg, said a tremendous responsibility has been placed upon us by Admiral Dewey who did not leave Manila after taking it. God's hand was there and we are placed in trust. Through the faithful discharge of this trust we will advance. We have met race problems at home and have been handicapped. Our methods of giving suffrage to the freedmen was a failure. We have in this land more ignorant and degraded blacks than then to care for.

Gen. C. H. Howard discussed "Civil Service Reform as Related to Our New Possessions," and said that a complete change in our civil service was a necessity. Our protégés, the American Indians, have suffered untold outrages at the hands of representatives of the government, and are helpless to right themselves. Our boasted system has in numberless cases resulted in wrong and wickedness. "Is this," said General Howard, "a system to extend to a new domain?"

Rev. A. S. Fiske, mentioned among "Civilizing Forces," the railroad, the establishment of homes, but better still the establishment of a system of remunerative labor. One million rations of food earned by self-respecting labor is better than the same in daily dole of charity, even by ecclesiastic hands. There should be no more breeding places of pestilence in the West Indies, but there should be established, both for old residents and for new comers, an intelligent system of labor, of moral living and of sanitary conditions. Let these blessings soon crown the one altruistic war in all the world's history. The most important battles of the Spanish war are yet to be fought in Congress, whose function it is to emancipate the delivered islands from their profoundest bondage, the bondage of wrong customs and degrading institutions.

Chaplain Wills brought the congratulations of the Presbyterian ministers of Philadelphia. "We may not favor expansion," he said, "but we cannot help the situation. If the warship is the missionary, we must accept conditions. 'They call us to deliver their land from error's chain.' True Christian civilization will be the crowning glory of our efforts both at home and abroad."

Mr. Furguson, of the New York Voice, elicited applause by inquiring, "Can a government that protects vice in Washington sweep vice out of a savage field? Can an impure system at home extend a pure system to others? If the saloon is good in a city then a canteen is good in a camp."

Dr. Kneeland, of the Sabbath Protective League, replied to the colonial idea and the territorial menace, combined with the thoughts on restrictions of suffrage, with its motto, "Manhood first, then manhood suffrage," by saying that it is not necessary to take these provinces as territories and eventually as states. To prove this he cited the government of Alaska, different from any territory, and of the District of Columbia. Government can be firmly established without the ballot. Broad principles can be put into active operation suitable to the conditions to be met.

A great deal was said about church property in Porto Rico and in the Philippines; about parochial versus public education; about the opium and liquor traffic, brutal amusements and the advisability of seeking a fitness for office before seeking office.

Four of our National superintendents figured on the program. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, enumerated "Our Duties to Childhood in Our New Island"; Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis told of the "Ellis Bill"; Mrs. E. M. Thacher spoke upon "The Deadly Canteens in Soldiers' Homes," and Mrs. Varila F. Cox discoursed upon "True Homes Developed in the Spanish Isles." Several persons spoke upon the civil Sabbath for them.

In the space which THE UNION SIGNAL can devote to this article it is impossible to give all the topics, and the names of many of the bright extemporaneous speakers have escaped me. I can mention, however, Mrs. Wellington White, of the Woman's National Sabbath Alliance; Mrs. Katherine Jones Bennett, of the Presbyterian Woman's Board Home Missions; Mrs. Belva Lockwood, secretary of the Universal Peace Union, and Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, of the Woman's Republican League. Among the gentlemen were Hon. Henry W. Blair, ex-senator from New Hampshire; Rev. Walter H. Brooks, the gifted colored temperance orator, Rev. Albert H. Plumb, of Boston, Anthony Comstock, Maj. George A. Hilton, whose eloquence is so well known to the W. C. T. U., Hon. Charles Lyman, president of the civil service commission, Rev. Howard H. Russell, D. D., of Ohio, field superintendent American Anti-Saloon League, Rev. F. D. Power, D. D., Rev. J. Fred Heisse, Mr. James L. Ewin and Rev. Leslie Moore, all of Washington, as well as Joshua Levering, of Baltimore; and Dr. Sheldon Jackson, whose report of "Exact Moral Conditions in Alaska" made the flesh creep and the heart sick. He said that in Alaska there is no public sentiment to carry out the prohibitory law, that jury and judge are apt to be in favor of liquor as well as other evils.

It is significant that among the very last things delivered was, "Practicable Federation of Moral Forces," by Rev. Walter Laidlaw, who represented the best city federation of churches in the world, and Rev. J. B. Davison, who represented the best federated state in the Union, Wisconsin. These two speeches ushered in a resolution to the effect that the work of this convention be made permanent by founding a National Federation of Moral Forces, whose representatives shall call another similar convention and otherwise promote coöperation in Christian reforms.

This remarkable convention immediately following the signing of the articles of peace which gives us new territory will stand as a monument to the sagacity and foresight of Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, to whom all its brightest features and its well conducted routine is due.

Mrs. Emily Underhill Burgess, of the W. C. T. U. peace department, sent by the Society of Friends, expressed this thought, and a vote of thanks was given to Mr. Crafts, the superintendent of the Reform Bureau. On the last afternoon a plebiscite on the four chief questions before the convention was taken by secret ballot, viz., on the Ellis Bill, to abolish liquor-selling in army canteens; on the Hepburn Bill, to exclude pictures and descriptions of prize-fights from the mails; on the question, whether prohibition should be given further trial in Alaska; on the question, whether the polygamist elected to Congress from Utah should be excluded.

Senor Quesada, the Cuban charge d' affaires resident in Washington, was deeply interested in the subjects of the convention, and had promised that General Garcia should appear upon the platform, but inexorable death claimed the brave soldier. General Garcia's funeral was attended on the day the convention opened.

Mr. Crafts spoke of the primaries and the lobby as the two handles to the wheel of politics, both largely in bad hands, and said they must be rescued. Mrs. Hunt's talk on "The Legitimate Lobby," was followed by a visit to the capitol, where reform measures were brought before the members of the judiciary committee of the House of Representatives.

MRS. CLINTON SMITH.

Reform News.

THE Young Woman's Christian Home management of Lafayette, Ind., is the motive power behind an aggressive crusade against the evil resorts of that city.

GENERAL WOOD has granted the petition of several Spanish merchants for permission to close their stores on Sunday. They have been compelled to keep open seven days in the week under the Spanish law. He has also issued an order directing the closing of the saloons on the Sabbath, and there is not likely to be a "Sunday closing" question in Santiago so long as that city shall be under military rule.

THE grand jury of Lexington, Ky., has returned indictments against the mayor and board of police commissioners and 101 of the 124 licensed saloons in Lexington for selling liquor on Sundays. The mayor and board of police commissioners were indicted because they did not keep the saloons closed, as the law directs they shall and as they have done on several occasions. A special correspondent of the Chicago Tribune credits these wholesale indictments to the work of the local Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

LEADING members of the Chicago Liquor Dealers' Protective Association propose to send a committee to Springfield to labor in the interest of a bill so to amend the charter of the city of Chicago that in future a commission of three will be invested with the power to grant and revoke licenses. It is claimed that the majority of "barrel houses" in Chicago make their own whiskies from wood alcohol, which is of itself poison, and it is said that a man who makes a habit of drinking this kind of whisky is forever afterward a slave to it. Prohibition legislation is wanted under this head.

MAYOR HARRISON, of Chicago, complying with the request of prominent citizens, refused to grant a license to J. M. Dewald for a saloon near the Blaine school. Dewald applied for a writ of mandamus, on the ground that the mayor had not the right to refuse a saloon license when the applicant was a man of good moral character and otherwise legally sound. Judge Hanecy, in refusing to grant the mandamus said: "If people in resident districts can successfully prevent the location of a saloon in their midst on the ground of respectability, how much more should the public schools be defended against such an establishment in its vicinity. I say, if that saloon should be the means of ruining one young man, it would be a good reason why the license should not be granted."

About Women.

MRS. ANNA B. AVERELL, of Chicago, has given the Presbyterian Hospital of this city $50,000 for the endowment of a new ward to contain ten free beds as a memorial of her husband.

MRS. LALLA W. JENKINS, an active suffragist and wife of the secretary of the territory of Oklahoma, has been a preacher in the Friends church for twenty-two years. She favors no wines at banquets.

MISS EUPHEMIA M. OLCOTT, of New York city, won the prize of twenty-five dollars, offered by the Woman's National Sabbath Alliance, for the best essay on "The Benefits of the Sanctified Sabbath to the Home and Community at Large." Her essay was entitled "The Sabbath a Delight," and will soon appear in print.

A GENERAL order has been issued by the Chicago and North-Western Railway Company, which in substance serves notice on 200 women employés of the road throughout the west that on and after January 1, their places will be filled with men. The reason for this sweeping revision of the employment policy of the road is due to the fact that retention of women in the operating department of the company was inconsistent with the administration's rule to advance to places of trust those who occupied clerical positions when ability and worth are shown. The women, it seems, are not inefficient, but by reason of their sex are ineligible for the higher posts of responsibility.

King Winter's Carnival.

BY MARIAN W. HUBBARD.

FROM out his ice cave in the North
The gray old hermit issues forth;
His breath is cold, and sick with dread,
The flowers wither, and are dead.
The wintry winds blow o'er the lea,
The low, sad moaning of the sea,
The gray gloom of the sullen sky,
Foretell that winter's king is nigh.
He locks with icy bands the rill,
He crowns with snow the mount and hill,
His fingers touch the trees so bare,
And lo! they blaze with jewels rare.
A mantle of the softest sheen
Makes fair all objects, poor and mean;
The palace and the cottage low
Are robed alike in pure white snow.
All hail King Winter! ring ye bells!
In joyful chords your music swells.
Tho' each fair season reigns with power,
'Tis this brings in our Christmas hour:
And once again the tuneful chime
Rings peace, good-will, to every clime;
For on this day our Saviour came,
While angel bands His birth proclaim.
Thro' Him sin's bitter chains are riven,
And opened wide the gates of heaven.

The International Baby.

BY JOHN F. COWAN.

THE great grim war monsters lay lazily rolling in Cadiz harbor, the admiral's pennant flaping idly above the hugest of them. Half an hour ago a steam launch had hugged her black sides, bringing welcome informal visitors, the admiral's wife and baby. He was now enjoying with his loved ones a quiet domestic tête-a-tête in his handsomely furnished quarters. Let him have this hour of sunshine. Who knew but it might be the last? These were times fraught with peril, and sailing orders were momentarily expected.

"The darling is growing sleepy, Alphonse. You must keep awake, baby. Fie! you are with papa. Toss her up, Alphonse."

The grave, swarthy man in admiral's uniform held out his hands to receive the dainty waxen morsel in her fleecy robes. His stalwart arms sent her leaping toward the ceiling, and his deep musical voice sang out gleefully:

"This is the way the good ship tosses,
Up and down,
Up and down,
On the billowy main."

The poetry certainly was not humorous, nor was the dignified admiral much of a star as a a comic singer, but all the same the baby laughed in the greatest glee and kicked exuberantly with her tiny feet, encased in dainty silk stockings. She had her own baby reasons for laughing, and when, a few minutes after, she cuddled her curly head on the gilt braided coat and showed unmistakable signs of drowsiness, it was of no use to persuade. She was a privateer, the admiral laughingly said to his black-eyed wife, and took orders from no one.

"Too bad, Alphonse!" declared the Castilian beauty, "but I'll just have to tuck her away in your berth. Anyway, we can finish our chat about our plans when this war is over and you are honorably retired."

At the headquarters of the naval commandant in the fortress the telegraph instrument was clicking monotonously. Suddenly it began to rattle off a livelier tune, and the commandant pricked up his ears. Soon his eye flashed and he summoned an aid. Before the message was completed the messenger stood like a courser nerved for the race. A sharp word of command, and he dashed toward a dispatch boat moored at the government pier with steam up.

"To the flagship at full speed!" was the urgent command.

Under full draught the sharp prow of the craft cut the water like a Damascus blade. She hailed the flagship and was made fast. The excited messenger sped to the admiral, and with a hand shaking from nervous excitement delivered the sealed orders.

"Steam westward, ready for immediate action. The enemy's fleet approaching. Engage and destroy at all hazards. BERMEJO."

In an instant, as if it had received a powerful electric shock, everything on board the ship and fleet was quivering with eagerness to be off. Half an hour later the flagship led the squadron, proudly tossing the foam from her neck, and only when the rearmost hull became a speck did a woman's eyes desist from watching it.

"There! I have made my eyes ache. I must hasten to baby, now. Heaven protect her father!"

As she opened the door of her room, limp and heavy-eyed as compared with the joyous creature who had gone to meet her husband, suddenly she paused, a dazed look in her eye, put her hand to her head, then shrieked as though some awful truth had suddenly burst upon her, and fell heavily to the floor in a swoon.

The opening of the door had revealed the startling fact that there was no baby in the room!

A few hours later you would scarce have recognized as the laughing man who tossed the baby, the stern commander of the battling fleet. Not once since the order came and he hurriedly kissed his wife goodby had he left his post. As he stood there, the storm center of a cyclonic clash of giant forces, batteries all around him boomed forth their bellowings of hate and belched mouthfuls of fire which hurled tons of shells shrieking and crashing on their destroying way.

His own ship was a blazing, roaring volcano, but she answered in vain valorously the thunderous challenges of her assailants. The dead and dying littered her decks and clogged her passageways. Her engines were disabled, and she was on fire in several places, her ammunition was almost gone, and she was drifting, a helpless hulk, within range of a deadly, concentrated fire which must send her to the bottom.

But suddenly there came a lull in the deafening tumult of battle. All eyes were strained to discover its meaning. Ah! the admiral's pennant has been hauled down, and the snowy token of submission fluttered in its place; but the admiral lay dead in his turret.

Quickly a boat put out from the victorious fleet and boarded the sinking craft. The crew hastened to secure the living and to rescue whatever of value could be removed. They were especially charged to secure the admiral's papers. Before the door of his quarters they halted and stared in amazement. What was that strange sound within—the ship's cat?

A push on the door revealed the author of the mysterious wailings which had startled the superstitious seamen. There on the admiral's berth lay a red-eyed, swollen-cheeked, frowsy-headed, hungry, mad, screaming, kicking baby!

"Well, if this 'ere ain't a go, Bill!" ejaculated one of the astounded jackies.

"Shiver my timbers! A young un. Batteries all in action, too."

"Mus' be game stock, Bill. I say, be she er prisoner or er prize?"

"Prisoner, in course. Fetch her to quarter, Tom. See that bomb?"

"I say she's a prize, But I wouldn't like to be her crew."

"Prisoner er war, sure," emphatically insisted Bill, as he stooped to make a closer inspection and received a blow from both the flying feet square in his face, while the nursing bottle, which he suspected of being a bomb, was flung with a wild but vengeful aim which all but demolished his upper works.

But the question, prisoner or prize, was not to be settled by them. Fifteen minutes later an officer touched his cap to the victorious admiral, and, with a queer smile on his face, said:

"I beg leave to report, sir, a very strange capture."

"What, more prisoners? Report them to Capt—"

"N—o s—sir. It's not exactly a prisoner, sir, but a—"

"A prize? Report her to—"

"But I—I'm n—not exactly sure that it is a prize."

"What are you stammering and mumbling this way for? Bless my stars! What was that noise?"

"That is it, sir."

"It? What, you idiot? Open that door."

Compliance with his peremptory order revealed a spectacle that made the admiral first stare, then break into a roar of laughter. There stood the two stalwart seamen, exerting themselves to the utmost to quiet a famishing, rebellious, struggling, shrieking baby, one of them also carefully guarding the supposed bomb, which he had brought submerged in a bucket of water.

As soon as the mirth-convulsed admiral could control his risibilities, he issued a prompt command: "Make the little craft fast in my berth. Take that thing to the steward and have it filled with warm milk. Pick it up with your hand, you lubber; it won't explode. I'm not so sure of the other thing, though," he added, to the officers off duty, who had been attracted to the scene by the unwonted sounds.

By the time the contents of the milk bottle had gurgled down the vociferous throat, his little prisoner, prize, enemy, whatnot, was restored to a peace footing for the moment, and his pen flew over his dispatches. They closed with:

"Please advise me at once if I shall regard it as a prisoner or a prize. BRADSHAW."

The dispatch boat steamed into the nearest cable station, and in due time steamed back again with replies and fresh milk. The officer bearing the former had to knock twice on the admiral's door.

The grizzled head of the doughty sea chief was thrust through a crack, and with a warning gesture of his finger he growled in subdued gutterals: "Sh—Do you want to wake it, confound you? Give orders that the first mother's son of them that makes a noise, Ill have him lashed to the top-mast, or else make him sing lullabys until it goes to sleep again."

The terrible threat was passed around, and while the admiral read his dispatches, the crew were questioning whether to mutiny or jump overboard.

The first line he read made him start. It ran:

"French minister at Madrid cables inquiry after infant of Admiral Mojave, left on shipboard by mistake. Mother distracted. If possible cable tidings to enemy. LONG."

The admiral heaved a sigh, but whether of dismay or relief, it caused the baby in his berth to gently open her soft eyes and turn them inquiringly toward him. Then, with a smile hovering about the pink lips, she launched forth into a series of soft, gurgling, confiding "goo-goos," appealing to him so artlessly with her dark eyes and dimpled, outstretched hands to be lifted from her couch, that his bachelor heart was warmed to the core, though his rough training made him dismally distrustful of his ability to cope with the situation.

"Bless my stars!" he ejaculated, "something must be done for you. But what? There are three hundred men on this ship brave enough to face death, but every one of them is too big a coward to attempt the things that you need done, and, rattle my bones, I've forgotten all I ever knew about safety pins and colic. This is a desperate emergency for which the naval regulations don't provide."

He pressed an electric button with nervous haste and said to the servant who answered: "Send Captain Hardcastle."

The seasoned old veteran turned pale when he received the message, and left his messmates muttering, with a stony look on his face, "I'll go back in irons before I'll touch it. How would I know which end to hold up?"

"Your commands, sir," he saluted his superior with a grim face.

"Ahem—Captain—hang it, we shall have to do something for the—ahem—relief of—of the—" the sentence was completed by a nod towards his berth.

Captain Hardcastle stiffened himself and ventured to suggest, in icy tones: "Would you call a council of war, sir?"

"Council of war to Guinea!"

"Shall I order a squad to put the enemy in irons, sir?"

"Hang it, you know better! But see here; I'm willing to give up my berth, but—but—there are certain little formalities customary in dealing with such—ah—cases—hang it; you ought to know what I mean. Some of you ought to be able to—"

"I'm not trained to wet nursing, sir?"

"Then get some one who was."

"Do you order me on a cruise, sir?" demanded the captain, a gleam of hope lighting his eye.

"Anything—great heavens, man! Can't you see that something must be done?"

. . . . . .

Over the dancing waves flew Captain Hardcastle's ship. Away yonder darted a huge ocean grewhound.

Boom! rang the command to heave to.

Up ran the German colors to her top-masts, but she slowed not a single revolution.

Boom! Crash! A solid shot shattered her rigging. Pale with indignation, her captain gave the order to stop.

"What does this outrage mean, sir?"

"I'm sorry captain, but there was no other craft in sight, and I must have a cow and a woman. Have you them aboard?"

"A what? Do you add insult to injury? You shall know what flag you outrage."

"But have you them?"

"I suppose so."

"Then if you will not let me have them willingly, I must take them as contraband of war. I'll explain, and no doubt the government will apologize."

The explanation which followed changed the alarm of the passengers who had gathered around to interest, and then to pity. "Poor thing!" burst from more than one pair of feminine lips. Then whispers were exchanged, and mischievous glances cast at Captain Hardcastle, accompanied by much giggling and blushing. But one sweet-faced woman spoke up and said:

"I will willingly go with you. I am on my way to America, having been mobbed and driven out of Spain because my father and mother, now dead, were Americans."

In Washington an important cabinet meeting was being held. "A most extraordinary complication," said the President, in a tone of deep annoyance. His heavy eyes showed that he had been losing sleep. "The Secretary of State has official communications from three governments concerning a little—ahem—I hardly know whether to call it a prisoner or a prize. The French government is anxious to assume a friendly protectorate. The German government demands an explanation of the firing on her flag. The Spanish government offers to exchange some captured merchantmen, and threatens to kidnap the children of some of our officials if we refuse."

. . . . . .

The gray-hulled fleet bore down on Cadiz. They were sighted and signals of warning flashed to fortress and fleet. Tremendous was the excitement. Herculean were the preparations to meet coming shock of battle. Forts bristled with menacing batteries. Warships throbbed with pent up energy. Deadly submerged mines waited the igniting spark in ghastly silence. The city panted and boiled with excitement. The very throne at Madrid trembled as with ague.

But all at once a shout rent the air. Some one had made a momentous discovery. Every ship of the advancing squadron bore a white flag. What could it mean? Treachery?

A boat's crew put off from the admiral's ship and was cautiously met by one from the shore. A brief consultation was held, then both boats approached the shore together. Their crews landed. A messenger was dispatched in hot haste. The excitement rose to fever pitch. Strange, wild rumors were rife among the assembled populace. But even while they yet stared at each other and breathed quick and hard, a carriage came driving pell-mell down to the quay. A black robed woman tottered down the steps, and thrusting aside her attendants, rushed frantically forward.

Then followed a scene that, when it was flashed round the world at lighting speed, thrilled the hearts of nations with those higher, humaner feelings that war paralyzes. Admiral Bradshaw stepped forward to meet the black robed woman, by his side the nurse who quickly laid in the quivering mother's arms a precious white bundle, saying in Spanish as she did so: "Madam, it gives me much joy to restore your child."

"Thank God that this second cup of bitterness is removed!" sobbed the hysterical mother, pressing the babe tumultuously to her breast. She turned to leave, but remembered that gratitude demanded some expression. As she glanced at the nurse for the first time she started and exclaimed, "Hortense!"

"Yes, I am Hortense, your former governess, whom you thrust out because I loved the land of my father and mother, and whom those who stand by insulted and stoned on these streets. But all that is forgotten in my joy that your child is in your arms again. No, I deserve no thanks. I did it for Christ. But this brave gentleman deserves your thanks. He has been as tender as a father to the little one; giving up his stateroom and sacrificing his comfort for it."

"Pardon, senor," exclaimed the mother, through her tears. "I thought American soldiers were monsters. I expected my babe would be inhumanly treated or brutally murdered, when I knew it was not lost with the ship. How can I praise your noble generosity?"

"Madam," spoke the brave admiral, "the only reward I crave besides that of witnessing your joy and the child's safety, is the opportunity of assuring Spain that Americans never make war on the defenseless, but rather to succor suffering women and children. One little boon only I ask; that I may take one kiss from the pure lips of your babe, who, perhaps, is the the only one of her race that does not hate me to-day." The request was granted, and as, with all heads uncovered, the bronzed hero of battle stooped to touch the rosy lips of the child he had come to love, a moment's breathless pause was followed by ringing cheers from ten thousand throats that almost shook the battlements.

Then something else, heretofore unchronicled in the history of war, took place. As the splendid, gray-hulled fleet steamed out of the harbor, from out the steely throats of the harbor defenders there boomed a friendly salute; and from the black portholes of the steel-ribbed monsters of war there bellowed back an answer that carried no hurtling death missiles.

"The international baby has happily become again the despot of its own nursery instead of a bone of international contention," commented one of the newspapers next day. But the memory of the episode has become an international possession so dear to the hearts of all peoples that it will be an imperishable part of the world's treasure of storied deeds of lofty conduct which attest the inherent greatness of man.

Co-operation.

BY HENRY D. LLOYD.

THE coöperative movement, after fifty years of struggle in Great Britain, has had fifty years of living prosperity, and a greater prosperity is coming into plain view. It has achieved an economic footing of a hundred millions of property. Some of the best men and best thinkers have given it leadership. At least one-seventh of the population of Great Britain have been enlisted in its ranks—the pick of the working classes of the greatest of European nations. It is an established religion, for coöperation is not a method of business merely, but an ideal of conduct and a theory of human relations. Without cathedrals, creeds, ritual, or priests, it has not only openly professed, but has successfully institutionalized the Golden Rule in business.

Coöperation has won the right to be accounted the most important social movement of our times outside of politics. It is, of course, only a half truth. It is the voluntary or domestic expression of the same resurgent spirit of self-help by each-other-help of which the republic, democracy and the hopes of socialism are the political or public expression. Each of these—the private or voluntary, the public or political—is a half truth, but the world needs half truths to make up its whole truth.

We are a different people from the English and our circumstances are different. When the English coöperative movement struck its present roots, the consolidation of industry had hardly begun; while to-day in America, it does not seem to have much farther to go to bring us to the consummation of an industrial feudalism which will make impossible any individual, or even co-operative initiative or independence. Many of the American students and workers feel faintheartedly that the development of the trusts makes it hopeless for coöperation to obtain that foothold here which the English workmen succeeded in obtaining a generation ago. There is, too, the feeling among many of us that Americans are not a coöperative people; that, as has been said, our genius is more for co-talking than for co-working. But this is the greatest of mistakes. America has been doing a coöperative work even more remarkable than that of England. Each nation has followed its genius on the lines of greatest need and least resistance. English coöperation has been industrial; ours has been political. The achievement of America in uniting in one common life and one coöperative citizenship the African and European, and even Asiatic types, which elsewhere glare at each other with hatred across frontiers of bayonets, is the greatest triumph of coöperation which the history of civilization has yet shown. Compared with this, the English task of getting the men of one trade and one locality to unite in so simple a social function as purchasing or making commodities was easy. As America advances from political coöperation to industrial, its accomplishment is likely to be as much grander than that of Great Britain as the task is more difficult on account of extent of territory, racial variance, and the newness of social life.

There is some reason to expect that the American evolution in coöperation will be partly along the lines of colonization and the establishment of new communities. The American is a colonizer. All Americans are colonists from abroad. The West was colonized from the East. We colonized California and are now colonizing Alaska. One hears to-day in every direction in America of plans for coöperative colonies. That aptitude for political coöperation which has been forced upon us by the necessity of amalgamating so many nationalities fits us specially for community building. Village communities so placed as to have an easy command of the necessities of life can achieve an independence of the railroads and trusts, and an opportunity for the members for production and exchange with each other which would be out of reach if they remained disconnected individuals, lost in the meshes of the highly complicated and centralized economic system of the American business world. The English coöperators, I found, look with great hope to America. Thomas Hughes, in one of the letters which I saw, said in 1897: "I should not be surprised if America took the lead out of our hands." Mr. E. O. Greening, one of the closest of living students of the coöperative movement, said to me: "Coöperation will be slow to take root in America, but once started, it will develop into forms far greater than anything here." Mr. George Jacob Holyoake made an interesting suggestion: "The churches," he said, "may make coöperation go in the United States."

Rev. E. D. Maurice pointed out to the workingmen of Great Britain that the one indispensability for the success of coöperation was mutual confidence. Certain is it that coöperation in America must progress along lines where the people know each other, in their trades-unions or some other organizations—perhaps as Mr. Holyoake has said, in the churches—or where they will be forced together as in village communities. There is hardly, as yet, anywhere in America that neighborhood life which made it easy for the weavers of Rochdale or the shoemakers of Kettering, who had known each other almost from childhood, to get together. In London, where the population is nearly as shifting as in America, it has been found almost impossible to acclimatize coöperation. Coöperation can go on in America as in Great Britain and on the Continent, only by the help of men of means, culture and good-will—men well-to-do in good deeds as well as title deeds. What coöperation needs here, as elsewhere, is not philanthropy, but leadership; not endowment, but initiative.

Dragon Myths.

BY PROF. SARAH FRANCES WHITING.

THE study of comparative mythology has revealed the fact that every nation has its dragon myth, the legend of a huge and cruel monster, which at some period appeared within its boundaries, poisoned the atmosphere with its noisome, fiery breath, ravaged and devoured on every side and demanded daily offerings of children, youth and maidens, of high and low, rich and poor.

These are thus described, Ahriman and Tahak the Persian dragons; and Fafine, the German dragon; and Grendel, slain by the Saxon, Beowulf; and the "cruel, cursed enemy, the huge great dragon, horrible in sight," slain by St. George, besides numerous red and black nameless dreadful scourges destroyed by other saints and heroes.

Whether or not these stories were primarily nature myths, a deeper spiritual meaning has always been recognized. Since the scene in the garden of Eden the dragon has been the type of evil fighting with good, of darkness quenching the light.

There are yet devouring dragons in this enlightened age, which ravage our fair cities and the country side, and devour the young and old, high and low, rich and poor; and the name of the most foul fiend of all is the great dragon, Saloon.

In Spenser's "Faery Queene" we read how a "huge great dragon, horrible in sight, bred in the loathly lakes of Tartar, with murderous ravine and devouring might, a kingdom spoiled, and country wasted quight." King, queen and nobles fled for safety into the "castle strong," where, themselves "fast embared in mighty brazen walls," they left their helpless people to become the dragon's daily prey. We read how while all were inactive, as if paralyzed, it was the princess Una, who took her life in her hands and escaped from the country unobserved that she might find a knight, noble and valorous, who should undertake her adventure.

We read how Una and the Red Cross knight set forth, but how "the guilefull great enchaunter" parts the Red Cross knight from Truth, "into whose stead faire Falshood steps and workes him woefull ruth." Beguiled on the way by this false Duessa, he is seized by the giant, Orgoglio, and turned from his high endeavor. Meantime the dragon ravaged and devoured the kingdom of the princess Una.

The modern Una left her bower, and sought for champions to rid her kingdom of its scourge. A few doughty knights have done good battle, but the most, seized by the giant—the glittering bribes of the saloon dragon—seem paralyzed. Meanwhile the monster has waxed stronger and stronger, until it seemed no power could suffice to work its destruction.

What does the modern Una? She not only seeks to release her knights from their thralldom, but by a stroke of genius she determines to adopt a new method. She resolves to starve out the dragon. She will turn from fighting to teaching, and will make the children of the kingdom so wise and wary that they will not be allured by the flowers that grow near the monster's den, by the glamor of delights by which he seeks to entice them, nor by the garments of light in which he deceitfully arrays himself.

The nineteenth century Una, who will figure in the dragon myth of future ages, is the one who has shed abroad the white light of truth, and opened the eyes of many millions of youth. With her wise co-workers, she is leading them off in paths of happiness and long life, and in due time the impotent beast will starve in his den.

It is plain whence this allegory tends. The dragon myths of succeeding centuries will differ from those which filled our childish minds with fearsome awe, as the methods of reform to-day differ from the methods of earlier ages, and the part of the princess in the story will receive an added significance. The princess not only fights the dragons to-day, she endeavors to starve them.

Miss Willard emphasized this when she said: "The difference between the temperance reform in the earlier and later times is that between a straight line and a circle. Total abstinence was the sum total of the propaganda when John B. Gough began his work, and its natural offshoot, prohibition, came with Neal Dow, but the women, in their sober second thought and organized form, began less than twenty years ago to study the relations of the causes."

And some of the causes are ignorance, false views of truth, popular reliance upon fallacies. The belief that whisky or the wine bottle is the relieve-all in the family, which may, with impunity, be used by the laity without professional advice; that it warms when cold; gives strength when we are weak; is good for colds; assists digestion; makes us sleep well; that drunkenness is only the abuse of a "good creature of God."

The facts are, as has often been said, that it does not follow that because grapes, apples and barley are good creatures of God, therefore wine, cider and beer are also. The process of fermentation, a process of man's initiation, changes entirely the nature of the substances on which it acts. Alcohol and nicotine and opium are poisons and, with arsenic and nightshade, should be only administered by experts. The effects of these poisons, because more slow and less dramatic in action, are therefore more dangerous; one playing with them is playing with matches over a powder magazine.

The authorities for these facts which are to decide the ought of the coming generation, are men than whom none are more eminent in the medical profession in England and America; physiological investigators in German and Swiss universities; the statistics of hospitals where no alcohol is administered; the reports of state boards of health; the statistics of life insurance companies and the rates at which they fix policies for abstainers and drinkers; the reports of exploring parties in the tropics and polar regions; the reports of military commissions as to the greater amount of service which can be done without alcoholic drinks; the universal practice and testimony of athletes in our colleges and out, who are endeavoring to get the maximum of energy out of the body.

An eminent, chivalrous, but conservative divine, towards the close of an address on woman's sphere, a sphere which he conceived to be confined only to the fireside and immediate home circle, made this statement: "I shrink from the performance by woman of any public work, and though I cannot but respect that great and efficient organization, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, yet I always prefer the picture of St. George fighting the dragon, and the maiden standing by." Is there a woman who would not prefer that picture if it represented the fact? But since St. George has been beguiled, and the dragon devours, must not the modern Una awake and urge on her knight to the fight which will now take many days?

> "How now, Sir Knight, show what ye be,
> Add faith unto your force, and be not faint,
> Strangle him, els he sure will strangle thee."

And meantime, since she may not wield the sword or lance in legislative halls, nor yet the "lightning of the ballot," let her teach her children to be wise and wary, and thus weaken the dragon by starvation.

Drink Problems in Congress.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS, PH.D.

(Extracts from an address delivered before the National Anti-Saloon Convention, Cleveland, O.)

THE supreme question before Congress is whether Alaska and our new islands and our soldiers shall be protected against the saloon? If we deliver these islands over to that horrible triumvirate, the spoilsmen, the monopolist and the saloon, they may well pray for a return to Spain.

Shall our enlarged army—the enlargement itself is a great problem—be protected in the perilous tropics and elsewhere by the suppression of the regimental saloon or canteen? This last is the only one of these problems yet embodied in a reported bill. The bill forbids liquor selling not only in canteens, but also in soldiers' homes, immigrant stations and in all government buildings.

Half-developed peoples, at least, must be protected against alcohol, as we would keep razors and poisons from children. In other words, the tinted races in their simplicity must be protected against white savages of the saloons. This recalls the story told by Bishop Whipple at the recent Mohawk Indian conference. Being at an Indian camp and having occasion to go to a distance, he asked the chief whether he would need to lock up the valuables he left in his tent. "Oh, no," said the chief, "there isn't a white man within fifty miles."

Prohibitionists think that we should not only keep the white savages of the drink traffic away from the nobler savages they seek to destroy, but also stop making white savages, by suppressing our own saloons. But many who are far from believing in prohibition for themselves favor it for half-developed child races. For instance, the most distinguished petitioner for Princeton punch advocated in a president's message prohibition for Africa. Alaska and our islands are a like case. And yet such good men as Governor Brady and John Sherman and President Jordan and Secretary Bliss call on the nation that has just sunk the whole navy of Spain to haul down its flag to the whisky pirates of Alaska and reward their lawlessness with licenses.

President Jordan, in his important article in the November Atlantic, shows that prohibition of liquor selling in Alaska has failed only as all other logical prohibitions have failed there, through such governmental idiocy as jury trials among wild men, and the appointment of officers, often without character, oftener without courage, and also without adequate powers. Russia or England might justly take Alaska from us on precisely the same grounds on which we have taken Cuba from Spain, namely, that we have not governed either humanely or efficiently.

The real argument for repeal of prohibition in Alaska is the hideous Judas cry for "revenue." Columbia is asked once more to sell her virtue for gold. How can men who have read even school histories overlook the fact that nations have not died of free trade or free silver, but of free love? Moral questions, even from the standpoint of national self-preservation are the supreme questions in politics.

There would be no trouble about getting "revenue" enough out of Alaska to pay for governing it well, if the government took a proper royalty not only from the sealers, but also from the other six great monopolies that are getting all the financial benefits of this great purchase made "by the people for the people."

This Alaskan question is really the test of our whole extension problem. The chief misgiving of thoughtful men about "extension" is prompted by our past blunderings with the Indians, the negro, and the alien, even when they were at our doors, and much more in our only colonial experiment in Alaska. While our peace commissioners were deliberating on new problems in Paris, we had bloody reminders in the Carolinas, in Illinois, and in Minnesota—a line of red flags across the land—that our old race and class problems are still with us in force. I waste no time in debating whether we should favor or oppose expansion. Providence has settled that. Hawaii and Porto Rico are already a part of our greater America Cuba is already under our flag for development—to decide for herself some day whether to stay in the family or go forth alone. If we truly take her "in trust for civilization" and not in trust for the trusts and rumsellers, and office holders, I have no doubt she will stay under our flag forever.

Let us turn from debates about "expansion" to the duty of civilizing our share of the world's wastes. Our hope for success in this rests on the hope that we have learned "how not to do it" from our mistakes in the past. Our Indians, negroes, and immigrants would have given us little trouble had we not turned them over to the spoilsmen and the saloons. While we keep our new islands under military government for a year that we may deliberately frame the best governments for them, let us prove that we have learned something by really governing Alaska.

To surrender Alaska to the saloons at this juncture would not only invite our saloonists everywhere to violate laws in order to secure their repeal, but would also assure them that our new possessions are to become their spoil. Alaska is the key to the situation. As goes Alaska so goes Manila. The question is much larger than it seems in many ways. For one thing, the nation has never yet repealed a prohibitory law. The party that turns over the Indians of Alaska to the licensed saloon will be held responsible for the blackest act in a whole "century of dishonor." Let no one suppose there is any argument for repealing prohibition in Alaska that is not essentially the same that has been used in vain in Kansas and Maine. It is the same old counterfeit sixpence. And yet we have become so used to yielding to the sophistries and threats and bribes of the liquor power that cabinet officers, and even missionaries, advise us to try high license, as if it had not been tried and everywhere found satisfactory to the liquor sellers, but to no one else except to those who care "for revenue only." The special peril in this case, as in so many others, is not due to the fact that all the bad men are for repealing prohibition, but that some good men, who know little of the tricks of this liquor trade, are on that side.

To win the Alaska battle would be the best token of victory in seeking as new "free soilers" to prevent the extension of this new slavery to our new island territories. We shall put the bull fight out of our Spanish islands of course, as one of the institutions that has made them brutish and cruel; but if we put the saloon in its place, these islands might well sigh for the lesser oppression of Spain.

The first trade to follow the flag to Manila was shiploads of beer. Unless prevented by law the American saloon will be firmly intrenched in these islands inside of a year With all of the great questions I have stated pending, and what the average congressman thinks the greatest of all, the river and harbor bill, it is evident that nothing less than a great popular uprising can carry through such legislation as will prove our nation worthy of the great trust God has laid upon us. It is to make this convention feel this supreme emergency, and carry this feeling far and wide, that I have come to this meeting. I believe we can save Alaska and our islands and our soldier boys only by a popular uprising. I believe we can do more in the next thirty days to increase the temperance host by concentrating our energies on carrying the anti-canteen bill and maintaining Alaskan prohibition than in any other way. In the anti-canteen bill, at least, we reformers on the thin skirmish line have, to an unusual degree, the support of the main army of the church of God, which can not afford to let it fail lest, besides despoiling the soldiers, contempt fall upon the church by such a proof of its political powerlessness.

Believe me, brothers of the firing line, our greatest work is to bring forward for this and every moral battle the church of God, which, in becoming the church militant, will in this world, as God intended, become the church triumphant.

Willard Hall Echoes.

'Tis always noontide somewhere,
And across the shining continents from shore to shore,
Somewhere our prayers are rising evermore.
—Adapted from Longfellow.

AN old man came into the office and said, "I have a message for you this morning. I thought of it in the noon meeting and I have learned the lesson; perhaps some one else needs it now:

'To act, to suffer may be nobly great,
But nature's mightiest effort is to wait.' "

The Bible says, "Wait upon the Lord, and He will renew thy strength."

. . . . . .

Pray earnestly that the man who came forward for prayers yesterday may be thoroughly converted. He is so weak, falls so often; has a fine mind but it is dulled by the drink habit. His children need him and his support, and he said, with tears streaming down his face, "Pray for my wife; she is not a Christian and she might help me if she would." Oh, mothers, educate your daughters so that they will have God for their guide, a sweet spirit for their inheritance, and more thoughtfulness for their influence over the souls of others. Pray also for two young men who were converted Sunday night. Among careless companions they will need unusual strength; for two young business men who came in to sign the pledge because, as one of them said, the drink was ruining them, body and soul. They left their names in the book and took the pledge cards with them. One of them said, "When I show that to the fellows if they have any honor about them they will heed it and not urge me to drink."

. . . . . .

A mother asked prayer for her boy that he may be speedily converted, as he is in great danger. A young girl asks prayer that she may find work, for she knows it will be her ruin if she works in a saloon, and that seems to be the only opening. Oh, pray earnestly to God that he will raise up friends and work for the tempted ones in Willard Hall!

Testimonies are strong and sweet and faith-inspiring. An old man told how in July, 1849, two A. M. God came to his waiting soul. Another said, "I do not know what fifty years will do if my life can be so changed in a few years. Conversion was merely a foretaste of what joy and belief in God has accomplished every day since." "When no other power could save me, Jesus Christ did it," said a bright faced man. Praying with a man, when he understood from God that his sins were forgiven and the burden gone, he cried out in his joy, "Why didn't you come before?"

As Mary of old ran quickly to tell the disciples of the risen Lord, let us all hasten to tell others of Jesus Christ's power to save.

An Open Letter to Dr. Wines.

[This very pertinent communication was crowded out of the last issue. But we are sure our readers will agree with us that it is better to give it late than never.—THE EDITORS.]

DEAR DOCTOR:—In your address at Kankakee, as nearly as I can remember, you said in substance that scientific temperance instruction in public schools should not be taught, as the children only learn a smattering of it and this was calculated to make them self-conscious little prigs; that the text books were worthless, and that your children were never taught this branch at school and none of them were drunkards. Now you must admit that children should be taught while their hearts are yet soft and capable of receiving impressions. That such impressions are lasting is evidenced by the fact that as one grows older they brighten, and are easily recalled, while after feelings are light and fleeting; consequently, if physiology is to be studied at all, this is the time and place.

Why do you call the text books worthless? What is physiology? It is the study of the body and its parts and how to preserve it in a healthy condition, what to do in case of emergency, etc. It may be true that the children only get a "smattering" of knowledge of this study if you want to make them physiologists, but this is not the object, and the same reasoning would apply equally to almost any other branch of study in the school. Should we not teach arithmetic because the child will not learn the higher branches of mathematics, chemistry, etc.? To be giving logical reasons why they should not make use of alcohol as a medicine or beverage, one of the most popular and destructive poisons, one that has caused more misery in this world than all other evil factors combined, would alone be sufficient to commend it to public favor. It was intended that reason should control desire, not that desire should overmaster reason, as it has done in the past because of a lack of education on this point. Ideas are received by understanding and approved or disapproved by reason. That this education which you assume is merely a smattering, is working in a quiet manner (but none the less meritorious on that account,) for the health of the individual and the preservation of the species, there can be no doubt. To illustrate: A man living in this place who had been in bad health for two years, nervously prostrated, was told by a ten-year-old boy, who was receiving a "smattering of scientific temperance instruction," that his condition was due to the excessive use of tobacco, explaining why. The next day he consulted a physician to know if the information he had gained "from the cradle" was correct. Being assured that it was, he quit the habit and for the past two years has been in perfect health. Another, to the astonishment of the attending physician, could describe the diaphragm and its functions as well as the effects of alcohol and tobacco. A man at a fashionable watering place getting out beyond his depth was rescued in a supposed drowned condition; the crowd of ignorant persons about him were at a loss what to do, when one of these little "prigs" went to his rescue and with her smattering of physiology obtained at a free school gave such intelligent directions to her associates that the man was out of danger ere a physician who had been sent for arrived. Another Illinois "prig" with her smattering of physiological knowledge, arrested what, but for this, would have proved a fatal traumatic hemorrhage. Most of the advanced scholars can tell you how many bones, muscles and nerves there are in the body and what offices they perform, and can draw a correct diagram of any part of the body.

Now these little missionaries ("self-conscious prigs") are doing good all along the line as we learn from daily experience, and a note of such individual instances would strengthen our cause and surprise, by their numbers, our most ardent workers. The children view this subject from a common-sense standpoint—for common sense is the power clearly to appreciate and rightly to decide on a question set for solution; it is the faculty to take a complete, full and consequently a truthful and correct view of a subject, and this, thanks to their text books, they are enabled to do, for they have found the light and heat there which enable them to mentally digest and fully understand its contents. There can be no earthly excuse for either a priest, preacher or physician pleading ignorance as a reason for not supporting temperance teaching in our schools, for they, of all men, daily witness the evil which follows the indulgence in intoxicating beverages, in its physical and psychical effects. How a man who professes to be a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus can refuse to assist in an attempt to rescue his fellow men who are on the road to ruin, or illuminate the path leading to alcoholic and kindred destruction, so that the future men of our republic may see the warning sign and avoid it, merely because he and members of his family have escaped its peril, is more than I can understand. That your remarks on this subject were out of place, untrue, unkind and uncalled for, must be the verdict of every unbiased mind.

EDITORS UNION SIGNAL:—The National Grange, at its recent session at Concord, N. H., again put itself on record as favoring woman suffrage.

The American Grange Bulletin, the official organ of the National Grange, published at Cincinnati, speaking of this action says: "Why not instruct the legislative committee to press the matter upon Congress until the desired result is obtained? All state granges, in justice to the universal demands of the order, should instruct their proper committee to press it upon state legislatures. The passing of resolutions will not accomplish much of itself. Let our legislatures, state and national, understand that we mean what we say."

The Grange was the first organization to admit women upon terms of perfect equality with men, and brothers of the order in high official position are frequently heard to say, that to this is largely due the strength and perpetuity of the Grange.

Chautauqua county, New York, has at present twenty-seven granges, eight of which have women masters, and sixteen have women secretaries, while in her Pomona, or county grange, the four first offices, master, overseer, lecturer and chaplain, are filled by women.

Direct Legislation.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL;—I am always glad to see good words for "direct legislation" in THE UNION SIGNAL, and often wish there was more said on the subject, for I believe it will be through direct legislation that prohibition will be won, for then the question can be decided by the people regardless of party. If only all political reformers would take up "direct legislation," and drop everything else, it would not be many years till the saloons would have to go.

Yet, after all, "It may not be my way, it may not be thy way, but in His own way the Lord will provide" for the removal of the terrible saloon. (MRS.) LIBBIE GRAVES.

I went on New Year's day—
You climb the hill where the pine trees grow,
And grandpa comes half way.

And plays he's a robber bold,
Then, when I can't help laughing,
And grandpa pretends to scold!

'A kiss, or your life, my dear!'
And then with a regular bear-hug
I wish him a happy New Year!"

How the Twins Kept Christmas.

In Two Chapters.

BY ADA MELVILLE SHAW.

CHAPTER II.

THE round, red face of Joe Schultz changed expressions and color many times in the next twenty minutes, as Katherine, emboldened by his really kind manner, told him a great deal about the friend who had "Gone away to keep Christmas with God," about the school, the stories in the little chapel, and the beautiful tree of a year ago.

"Can you help us, Mr. Joe? You see, you are the only one who would keep it a secret, 'cause you don't know anything about our Good Shepherd minister."

"I'll help you, little ones—sure I will. I used to know a good deal about Christmas trees when I was younger—and better."

"Were you better than you are now?" asked Karthie, her dark, trusting eyes lifted to his red face." I think you're nice now!"

Thus it fell out that a big saloonkeeper and two children climbed the hill behind the chapel, the afternoon before Christmas, and came back again, dragging a handsome young evergreen tree over the shining snow.

While the strong hands of "Mr. Joe" set up the tree, the children busied themselves dusting the seats and putting the worn hymn books in place.

"It isn't just like it was last year, Mr. Joe," said Seth, standing back to view the arrangements. There were candles then, and popcorn and apples and toys. But Karthie and I will speak and you are to ring the bell and it will remind us of last time."

Mr. Joe was busy with his handkerchief.

"Never mind," whispered Seth, "I guess his throat's like mine. It gets lumps in it when he's—interested, you know."

"Yes, I know," said Karthie, "girls cry but boys have lumps. Say, Sethie, don't you think Mr. Joe is nice?"

"He's acted nice so far, but, mother—"

Karthie nodded and sighed, "Yes, when mother says things are so they're always so. I hope she's made a mistake this time. How could she know? She never saw Mr. Joe."

It's his business. She said saloons were wicked."

Karthie looked relieved. "Oh, well," she said, in a whisper, hopping delightedly about on one foot, "he is'nt his business, is he? That's up by the postoffice. He's here fixing our Christmas tree and he's—nice."

"Now, what next, little lady?"

Karthie sprang forward.

"It's very nice, we thank you," she said. "To-morrow night you must come over and light a fire and ring the bell. The people will all come and then—oh, won't it be fun?"

So they bade Mr. Joe goodby, and he went back to his "business up by the postoffice" while the children chased each other home, almost too excited to keep their secret.

All the village was startled the next night when the Christmas stars were shining gloriously above the chapel and over the grave on the hillside, to hear the chapel bell that had hung silent since it had tolled farewell to the minister, break into joyous notes.

One and all they hurried to the chapel, while the bell called and called, ringing out its glad Christmas peals.

"Mother, are the angels ringing the chapel bell?"

"No, dear, angels do not ring bells," said the mother.

She did not know that a saloonkeeper's hand was on the rope, while at his side danced two children, shouting with delight and crying, "Oh, ring it hard, Mr. Joe! Teacher rang it hard. He said the angels were glad when Jesus was born. We're glad, are n't we? Ring it hard, hard, hard!"

And the saloonkeeper rang and the children danced and the people came.

"A tree! A tree! Oh, mother, it must have been our teacher. Isn't it beautiful? See the star. Oh, how it shines!"

Wonders had been worked on the tree after the children went home and their own delight and surprise were unbounded. It was loaded with all sorts of brightness and beauty. Candles glowed, snowy popcorn, streamed among the branches, gay toys peeped out of the greenness, and over all a great star glowed in benediction.

By-and-by two little figures stepped before the tree—a lad and lassie hand in hand, blue eyes and dark eyes alight with love and fun. The blue eyes were a bit afraid though, and turned imploringly toward the sister eyes beside them.

"Speech! Speech" called a delighted old farmer, and all the people cheered.

"I had a speech, last year," said Seth, his courage coming back. "But I've forgotten it. Karthie said we couldn't have a tree without a minister—no, I said it! But Mr. Joe helped us—he did it all. We hadn't anything to put on the tree, but we thought we would come 'cause the minister would like it. Karthie's going to sing 'The Shepherd Story,' and that's all."

He would have run off the little stage but Karthie held him fast, while she sang the dear old Christmas hymn. Tears flowed fast on every side. The clear child-voice bore a Christmas message, straight to the heart of the burly man hidden behind the evergreen tree. He had promised the children to stay, but had he wanted to he could not have gone. Some strange influence was holding him.

The song finished, Karthie ran behind the tree. All the people sat in waiting. It never occurred to them to help the little ones out.

"But you must come," they heard Karthie saying in pleading tones. "You promised to 'see it through.' The minister never, never broke a promise, and you're in his place to-night."

The big man could easily have pushed the slight little figure aside, but those slender, twisting fingers had over him that night the power of an angel's hand. He was led to the speaker's place and standing there—covered his face and sobbed.

By-and-by when he could speak, he told in manlier words than he had spoken since he left the farm years ago, the whole story of Karthie's "splendid idea."

"I'm not standing in your minister's place," he said, humbly. "I'm here because of those children. I'm glad God sent them. They have been my Christmas angels. I came to make money off you—drink money. . . . I used to be good like that little fellow there. I've made up my mind to-night to try it again, if you'll let me stay here and live like an honest man. Those blessed children showed me the minister's grave out there. I guess I must be the foolish sheep the Good Shepherd went after. . . . Will some one come and take the things off the tree?"

"You must, Mr. Joe!"

It was Karthie's voice. She had not understood his speech, but everyone was laughing and crying, and the lump was in Seth's throat, and she was dancing up and down.

Mr. Joe turned, and with a light in his eyes none had seen before—the light of holy joy and peace that came to the world when the Christmas angels sang—lifted the little girl to his shoulder.

"You shall do it yourself, little Christmas angel," he said, and while the star on the tree shone and brighter stars gleamed above the snow-hidden mound on the hillside, Karthie unloaded the Christmas tree and Mr. Joe, minute by minute, took larger strides towards the manhood he has lost many Christmas days before.

"Dare to do right, dare to be true."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I wish you all a very happy New Year. Before this reaches you, your holidays will be over, and school begun again. I hope you had a very happy time, and now the work commences, you are all ready for the hardest lesson. Surprise your teacher by studying a little more carefully than you have done, by observing rules a little more closely. If you do the right thing it helps all the other boys and girls.

Be a little more prompt to breakfast and in being ready when the bell rings, and that helps mamma, for she does not like you to be tardy. Remember always that the rules that seem hard are not for the good of mamma or the teacher, but for your own benefit.

Make every new year a stepping-stone to something better, and do not think Aunt Mary is too preachey. I love all my boys and girls and want them to be the very best in the world.

Lovingly yours,

AUNT MARY.

Nephews and Nieces.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am going to school now, and I have to go about a mile and a half. I have a fine teacher. I am a temperance boy and will vote the Prohibition ticket if I vote at all. We have local option in our county, but have some trouble with blind tigers.

Your nephew,

Sessumsville, Miss. DWIGHT FOSTER.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I have not seen any letters from Monrovia, and so I thought I would write. I go to school and I am in the sixth grade. I have two sisters; their names are Ida and Ellen. Ida is eight years old, and she is in the fourth grade. Ellen is six and she is in the second grade. I am eleven years old. Mamma belongs to the W. C. T. U.; all of us children belong to the L. T. L. The W. C. T. U. is going to organize an L. T. L. soon in Monrovia. There are no saloons, but there is one drug store.

With love to all the cousins,

Monrovia, Cal. BERTHA SHRODE.

DEAR AUNT MARY:—I am a little girl nine years old and have a little brother six. We have a very nice union free school here; I like it very much. I have been reading the Cozy Corner and it is nice. We have three kitties, and their names are Mother, Babe Tiny Bit and Tabitha. We also have quite a flock of hens.

"Ring in the New!"

"HAPPY New Year," "Happy New Year!" rings from merry voices and chiming bells everywhere, startling the echoes in response, "Happy New Year!" Whoever knew of a note of gladness that did not go reverberating through all space, and repeating itself on the harp strings of every human life it touched?

"But who knows it will be a happy new year?" asks the would-be wise, quizzically. "Who expects it?" growls the cynic. "Who hopes for it?" sneers the man whom life has defeated. "It can not be happy," say the sorrowful, and the world is full of the sorrowful. "It will not be happy," say the soured and embittered, and the world is full of the disappointed. "It could not be happy, with all the misery and poverty in it," says the pessimist. "It shall not be happy," says the enthusiast, "until it is rid of its sin and selfishness. "Happiness," says the philosopher, "is not the object of life, but usefulness."

"Such a happy new year!" says the young mother, clasping her winsome, dimpled darling to her heart; and, "It shall be a happy new year," says the Christian optimist, standing with bared head in the halo of light that comes streaming down the vistas of the future, seeing far into the circles

> "When light shall spread and man be liker man,
> "Through all the seasons of the golden year."

Would you be a cynic or a philosopher? The sorrowing and disappointed who are without hope, or the sorrowing who feels that "tears are for the night, and joy cometh in the morning"? Would you be a pessimist, seeing only the mists, or an optimist, looking beyond the narrowed horizon of to-day? Would you see fate in the world, blind, inexorable and hard, or God in the world working out the destiny of human souls? The new year is a new outlook. You look at it through the reflection of your own soul. If you have made it broad, and deep, and shining in the light of God's face, it will shine on. If it is troubled and turbid it will only give a flash here and there on its surface.

Of course, poverty is dire and selfishness and greed unbounded, but never before have so many thoughtful, consecrated men and women, in and out of the church, been thinking and talking of social and economic conditions, and planning the remedies for existing evils; never before have so many pointed back to the simple conditions in the life of the apostles and the early church. Intemperance and vice are skulking everywhere. These evils seem to debauch our men, our state, our nation, but they are challenged as never before. They hide their faces, they dare not come out openly and defy the powers of righteousness. It is half the victory to make men ashamed to be intemperate and foul.

And the mothers, daughters, sisters, wives, linked by the white chain that girdles the world, stands fearlessly to face the foes of the home, with the outlook of the seer in visions far adown the circle of the new century.

We know that sorrow and disappointment must come. The travail of pain is the birth of righteousness always. We know that temptation will assail virtue, that we must struggle with intemperance to the bitter end; we know that the strong will oppress the weak as long as they can and dare, but we know also that the process of education is, if slow, absolutely sure, and that in great crises, public opinion sometimes turns with the force of a whirlwind and sweeps away every barrier. The most potent forces of the universe are the silent ones; the voice of God is the still small voice; truth is universal, and we are teaching men and women, and better yet, children to see it.

We know not how the better time is coming, nor when, but we know why, and so we echo "Happy New Year!" and look forward joyously to the day when

> "all men's good
> Be each man's rule, and universal peace
> Lie like a shaft of light across the land
> And like a lane of beams athwart the sea,
> Through all the circle of the golden year,
> And feeling sure
> That unto him who works and feels he works
> The same grand year is ever at the doors."

"The Entrance of Thy Words Giveth Light."

FOR nearly two thousand years the Christian world has been obeying Christ's word to His disciples to go "into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." By song, by pen, by word of testimony, the good news has been proclaimed. Missionaries have gone into the dark places of the earth with a Bible in one hand and deeds of kindness in the other. Medical missionaries use the art of healing to open heart-doors to the Great Physician. Mrs. Livermore and Clara Barton have followed the red track of war in the name of the Prince of Peace. Salvation Armies, Christian Citizenship Leagues, temperance organizations, philanthropic societies, young people's religious bodies, reform clubs, the religious press and the great organized Christian church—all these are obeying that ancient command. In the hands of each and all who thus preach, and at the foundation of every organization thus preaching, is the Word of God. If there be one corporation in America which more than another helps forward the work of all the others, it surely is the great non-sectarian American Bible Society.

Organized in 1817, under a charter whose limitations provide that its sole endeavour shall be to circulate the Bible without note or comment, this society has distributed in all over sixty-four million volumes of Scripture. The success of all missionary effort depends upon readiness with which converts can be made familiar with the Word. Cheap Bibles, in many languages, with vigorously pushed and systematized distribution, has been the work of the Bible Society, and its increasing ability to pursue this activity, is the sign that God's blessing has rested on the effort. About four hundred colporteurs are supported, who are nothing more or less than the advance guard of the great missionary army that is to conquer the world for Christ. They translate, expound and vindicate the Scriptures in homes, shops and streets.

In China alone six and one-half million volumes have been circulated. The war with Japan may have had a great deal to do in the breaking up of Chinese conservatism and the advance of civilization in that strange old country, but who shall say what the Bible has had to do in this progress? In such fields as Turkey, Arabia, Austria, Spain, South America and Russia, where emissaries of the church are barely admitted and often sent roughly away, the Bible can win its own way. The Levant agency covers Bulgaria, European and Asiatic Turkey and Egypt, and among these were distributed last year, in thirty languages, nearly fifty thousand volumes. About forty-five thousand Arabic translations speak of a leaven that is working in the measure of Mohammedan meal.

But the work has only begun. Mexico does not yet possess a half million copies of the Book among her twelve million souls. Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines are holding out their hands to America. Her bullets struck off the chains of the Spaniard, but the people are not yet wholly free. Only a knowledge of Jesus Christ through the Word can make them "free indeed."

The W. C. T. U. provides for Bible distribution in its regular departments. In cases where individuals or local unions desire to enlarge this feature of their "preaching," we can suggest no better method than to coöperate with this society, which exists only to do good unto all classes, colors and conditions of men. Behind all its effort is the sure promise of God: "My word . . . shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."

Side-Lights on a Prohibition Contest.

THE contest for prohibition goes steadily on in Georgia. Within the past few months local option elections have been held in eleven counties and still others are called. Of these, eight have gone for prohibition; one, and probably two, for the liquor traffic, while the returns are not yet in from the other one. Hon. Walter B. Hill, one of Georgia's most prominent Prohibition leaders, sums up the situation thus: "Prohibition is the accepted policy of the state in dealing with the liquor traffic in so far as it affects the entire rural population of the state, the towns of smaller size, and even the cities of the second rank, such as Americus and Griffin. The sole question practically left for settlement in the state of Georgia is the solution of the liquor problem in the counties containing the five principal cities."

The most important of the two counties which have gone "wet" is Bibb, the county in which Macon is situated. We feel especially interested in the election there, as we learn from the papers that our white-ribboners were out in force and did their utmost to carry the election for the home against the saloon.

As usual, the comments of the local papers are full of interest and furnish many texts for sermons and discourses. The mayor of the city attributed the stirring up of the temperance issue to outsiders who took it upon themselves to interfere in the domestic concerns of Macon. He said that Macon had been managing the liquor traffic in a way eminently satisfactory to its citizens and that in fact it was progressing toward the very outcome desired by prohibitionists, the destruction of the traffic. He attributed this tendency to the changing views and habits of the people. He condemned the "wandering evangelists'' etc., who meddled in affairs which were none of their concern. This will not strike reformers, temperance or others, as new doctrine. It is wonderful how unanimous evildoers are in their desire to be let alone. So unanimous are they that our suspicions are aroused immediately with regard to any question whose adherents strenuously contend is a matter which can be settled only by those who are on the spot. We have noticed, however, that these advocates of the ''let alone'' policy wish it applied only one way. They are very anxious to be let alone but are not at all given to letting alone. Whenever, for example, the temperance issue is up as a state issue or in a large city, the liquor traffic of the nation rallies to the conflict. Liquor organs may assert that the question is a local one which each community should decide for itself without outside pressure; but they know well enough that the decision of one community will have much to do with the decision of every other community. Prohibition Maine is an argument stronger than the most eloquent temperance addresses that were ever uttered. As is usual, the words of the liquorites are founded upon falsehood and meant only to deceive; their actions are based upon a truth they would fain conceal. For there are no such things as local issues in the sense which would make them of no interest to outsiders. This is not saying that non-residents should have a vote concerning the management of what are correctly classed as the local affairs of a city or district. It is saying that non-residents have the right, which should never be called in question, of presenting their views and urging them in every legitimate way, upon the voters. Every town and city, the nation itself is deeply interested in the question whether Chicago shall enthrone corrupt boss rule over her municipal affairs or have her city government in the hands of honest, clean men, for corruption in Chicago tends to produce corruption in the municipal affairs of all the cities of the land and in national politics itself. The liquor power of the nation is right in thinking that it has an interest in the question whether or not Macon shall outlaw the liquor traffic. But the interest of the liquor power is one of dollars and cents only. The interest which every home in the land has in the issue involves everything that makes life dear and ends only when eternity shall end. The ''wandering evangelists,'' therefore, were attending strictly to their own business when they rallied the people of Bibb county to throw off the shackles of the saloon.

Another matter which interests us is the way in which our white-ribboners were regarded. Their presence at the polls from the opening to the closing of the same seems to have been a matter of unique interest. The masculine mind noted that the women, who impressed them as ''frightened fawns,'' gathered courage as the contest went on to approach nearer the polls and plead with the individual voters. There is no hint that in so doing the women appeared bold or in any sense unwomanly. On the contrary, the women are spoken of throughout most respectfully and the honesty of their intentions heartily conceded. The impracticable sentimentality of their ideas as opposed to the broad and statesmanlike views of the liquor side is referred to with the indulgent toleration which the ''legal male mind'' is accustomed to maintain toward idiosyncrasies of the ''emotional female mind.'' The good men of the newspaper fraternity appear to hug themselves over the chivalry of their fellow Georgians which protected the women from the slightest discourtesy. In this, so they say, the most cultured gentleman had no preeminence over his less refined brother, but all alike treated the women with the greatest respect. While we know no reason in the world why women who behave themselves should not be everywhere and at all times treated respectfully by men, or why men are to be specially commended for thus treating them, we do not mind in the least that our good brothers should indulge in a little laudation of the chivalry or American men. For it is true, and we are as proud of it as they are, that American men, without distinction of latitude or longitude, are the superiors of their sex in this respect. We have always said so, and what is more, we have always contended that they were a great deal better than they themselves sometimes admit. We have always insisted, and the election in Macon is but one added to many proofs of the truth of our assertion, that they will not cease to respect us or to treat us with consideration after they have given us the ballot. All their threats about seats in the street cars, etc., are figments of excited imaginations, as events will prove. And sometime we expect to exercise our unquestioned, inalienable right to say, ''I told you so.''

Once More the Mince Pie.

WERE not the annual mince pie controversy very amusing it would be very ridiculous. It does seem as though W. C. T. U. women ought by this time to have settled the question, to mince or not to mince. Under urgent solicitation, THE UNION SIGNAL once more takes a knife in hand—to mince the matter finally. May the tough positions be so cleanly desiccated that digestion may be speedy and there be no further difficulty.

1. Are mince pies necessary to health and happiness? Certainly not.

2. Is cider or brandy or any alcoholic ''seasoning'' a necessity in a mince pie? Certainly not.

3. If the mince meat ferment ever so slightly before use, is there a per cent of alcohol present therein? Science says yes.

4. Does the heat of cooking ''drive off'' said per cent of alcohol? This is a point of anxious controversy. House-mother brows are wrinkled over it and conscientious cooks are divided among themselves. Each one, however, may settle the point beyond a peradventure, on this wise: Compound with care a portion of mince meat. Allow fermentation to set in. Make and bake a pie. Carry said pie to a chemist who is reliable every way and secure his exact analysis of the contents.

5. If the heat of the cooking does not ''drive off'' all alcoholic taint, is it wrong to eat said pie? See I. Corinthians 8.

6. If we are guests in a house, and mince pie is offered to us which we know contains alcohol, is it wrong to eat, rude to refuse? See I. Corinthians 8.

7. Can we ''get along'' without mince pie? How can we make temperance mince pie? Do we break our pledge when we take alcoholic mince pie? Is it possible, oh sisters of the white-ribbon army, these be small things to vex you when souls wait on every hand for a ministry greater than that of pies! If a mince pie cause you one hour's perplexity, or possibly endanger the liberty of any who may partake, in the name of all that is sensible and womanly, banish the pie! To apply a little word of our apostolic brother Paul right here—mince meat commendeth us not to God; for neither if we eat are we the better; neither if we eat not are we the worse. We can eat in fellowship without mince pie. People have been known to give God thanks for all His goodness without breaking mince meat crust over it. We need not stumble over pies on our road to perfection.

Therefore, be it resolved by every wise woman that if mince pie make her to offend her own conscience or another's, it would be sensible, womanly and Christian, to eat no more mince pies while the world stands.

Fifty Years of Independence.

THE New York Independent has been celebrating its fiftieth anniversary. It has a record of five decades of honor and fearlessness. Richard Salter Storrs, D.D., LL.D., the one living representative of the brilliant corps of editors in 1848, contributes an article to this anniversary issue, which gives a fine view of the shifting scenes of fifty years. The establishment of a newspaper is no longer ''as simple a process as that of pitching a summer tent.'' Journalism is as much more complicated to-day as New York streets are different now from the streets of fifty years ago, ''with their modest house fronts and peaceable omnibuses.'' Church controversies and differences Dr. Storrs has watched in the process of leveling down—and up. When the new paper began its career, ''the authority of the slave power seemed established at Washington.'' Between church and state, Dr. Storrs says, ''it was a tolerably exciting time.''

A most interesting article by Commodore Francis J. Higginson, U. S. A., gives a glimpse of ''Two Wars Within One Lifetime.'' In June, 1861, the commodore, as a midshipman, sailed from Boston port for Charlestown and Key West. On May 13, 1898, in command of the Massachusetts, he sailed from Hampton Roads with the flying squadron for Charlestown and Key West, taking the same course to reach the enemy of earlier days.

The Independent began its career as an exponent of Congregationalism, but was great enough to bend to the stress of progress and become what it is now, undenominational.

One interesting feature of this half century celebration of our cotemporary is the reproduction of poems contributed during the years by men and women whose names have now world-fame. Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, the Cary sisters and Edna Dean Proctor wrote on anti-slavery themes. Edmund Clarence Stedman's poem, ''Wanted—A Man,'' stirred every reader's soul. Longfellow, Whittier, Bryant, Holmes, Browning, Aldrich, Larcom, Lanier, have all been the Independent's honored contributors.

Personal.

REV. ANNA SHAW was a welcome caller at Headquarters last week. She had just returned from Menominee, Mich., where she lectured very acceptably, the press of that city giving her most cordial commendation.

MRS. MARY B. CURLEE, president of Mississippi, writes to say that her name was omitted in the report of the roll call on the Temple resolution at the National Convention. She voted ''Yes,'' and desires that THE UNION SIGNAL set her right before her constituency, which we are very glad to do.

M. M. COTE, M. D., of Rangoon, Burma, a Canadian graduate of the Woman's Medical College of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., was at Headquarters recently, en route to India, where she has labored for ten years. Dr. Cote has been in America since last June, taking a post-graduate course.

DURING the session of the National Council of Women, at Omaha, Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, National superintendent of physical culture for the W. C. T. U., presented the report of the press committee in place of the chairman, supplementing the same with a talk upon the necessity for physical betterment before correct dress among women can prevail.

Tasmania.

THE most notable event of the month was the annual convention of the Tasmanian Christian Endeavor Society which has just been held in Launceston. The meetings were large, representative and enthusiastic, as well as instructive and helpful to the bulk of our Endeavorers. The subjects of temperance and gambling were freely discussed at various meetings, and there was but one feeling manifested, and that was that the attitude of the Christian Endeavor Society to national vices must not only be hostile, but that it must be also aggressive against these destructive forces. The formation of Christian Citizenship committees in connection with each local society was strongly urged; this in order that the members might become more familiar with the duties and privileges of citizenship, and use them for the glory of God and the good of others. During the past year there has been an increase of interest in temperance work; signatures to the pledge have been secured, and gospel temperance meetings have been held. Pastor Blakie, a man strong for righteousness, has been elected president. By a revision of the constitution three new officers were added to the executive; these are three elected vice-presidents, and Mrs. Rooke, our colonial president, has the honor of being one of the chosen three.

The Police Act Amendment Bill, which provided for the curfew ordinance, passed safely through its several readings in the House of Assembly, but when it came before the legislative council, the important clause was on its second reading strongly objected to, and the bill by a majority of three was voted to be read that day six months. Several of the members of the legislative council considered that the act savored of grandmotherly legislation and that it implied that Hobart was a very wicked city indeed. We could scarcely expect that such an innovation as was proposed would meet with immediate success; but the reception accorded it by the House of Assembly is encouraging, and we must just try again and agitate for more restrictive laws for our young people.

Efforts are now being made to launch another gambling institution, to be known as the "Colonial Consultation Company." The prospectus has been issued, and it tells that it will be carried on on the same lines as Tattersall's. The low prices of the shares and the assured large profits are the strong inducements held out to the public. Resistance against this new temptation will be shown by the Christian people of Tasmania, and we trust that by prayer and united effort we shall be able to keep it from becoming an activity in our midst.

The colonial president, Mrs. Rooke, has been visiting south, and during her short stay had a very busy time. In the brief term of five days, she gave addresses at nine different gatherings. Two of these were large drawing-room meetings, one being a welcome one given by the Hobart members, the other to arouse interest in the Y branch of our work. The city Loyal Temperance Legioners were addressed, and a very happy meeting at the new rooms of the Y. W. C. A. was conducted by her. In company with Mrs. Overell, colonial superintendent of mothers' meetings, she visited Sorrell, where a union was lately organized, and there held a public meeting. The conduct of the usual Saturday night evangelistic and temperance meeting held in the Y. M. C. A. rooms was taken by her. On Sunday afternoon the large Sunday-school belonging to the Melville Street Wesleyan church was addressed, and at the evening service of the Primitive Methodist church, which was taken by Mrs. Barber, the worthy wife of the worthy pastor, Mrs. Rooke spoke on the "Indwelling of the Holy Spirit." On the following day Richmond was visited, when the annual medal contest of the Legioners of this quaint little village was held. The gathering was a marked success, and under the able leadership of Miss E. Searle the young soldiers acquitted themselves beautifully. The recitation chosen was a selection from a speech of Dean Farrar and the successful competitor deserved her reward.

While in Hobart, Mrs. Rooke presided at a meeting of executive where much business was discussed and settled. It was decided to take up three new departmenis of work, anti-gambling, systematic giving and World's missionary, and three northern members were appointed as superintendents. The convention of 1899 was fixed to take place during the third week in March, and in the interest of temperance it was unanimously voted that the colonial union affiliate with the Tasmanian Prohibition League; Mrs. Rooke, colonial president, and Miss Espie, colonial superintendent of franchise and rescue departments, were appointed representatives.

In the afternoon of the 28th, at the invitation of Mrs. Wm. Hart, about fifty members of the Launceston union assembled at Bi-ferns to meet Mrs. Rooke. Some of the members of the newly formed Y Branch were present, and one of their number contributed to the enjoyment of those assembled by singing "Rest in the Lord," and "The Holy City." The Y president, on behalf of her "girls," presented Mrs. Rooke with a handsome basket of flowers. Our colonial president has received a warm welcome wherever she has gone, and has met with the love and kindness white-ribboners know so well how to bestow.

September 28, our beloved Miss Willard's birthday, was not allowed to pass by unobserved in Tasmania, and public and private efforts were made to use it for the advancement of the work she loved so well. The Launceston union took up the matter warmly; a prayer and consecration meeting was held at the noon hour, and in the afternoon meetings were held in the homes of four of the members. The public meeting held in the evening was a decided success. It was presided over by the mayor, Alderman Sutton, and the devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Fysh. Speeches were given by Mrs. Blair, colonial corresponding secretary, and the Revs. C. Lancastar and H. Jones, M. A. Miss Rose Wright gave an interesting address on temperance work in India, and solos were rendered by the Misses Reeves, Webb and Jackson, Y members. The new song arranged for a quartet, "Press On," which is dedicated to Miss Willard, was sung for the first time in Tasmania, and was most favorably received. The Wynward union held a public meeting, and by request repeated the program given by the L. T. L's at their annual meeting. The attendance was good, and an interesting address on Miss Willard's life was given by Mrs. Braham, local president. At Burnie a prayer and consecration meeting was held in the afternoon, and also a public meeting. Two new members were gained and several signatures to the pledge were obtained. We heard of a Southern member gaining fourteen signatures to the pledge and one new member. The work and life of our sainted leader is becoming more generally known, and though she has entered into the invisible home, yet she still speaks to us and from afar we hear her voice and follow on to know the Lord and His will for humanity.

Victoria.

DURING the past months, since last report, fifty-seven members have been added to our ranks. Mrs. Nicholls, Australasian president, and Mrs. Press, Victorian president, have had very successful tours. Mrs. Nicholls is still in Victoria, not yet having finished her mission.

The annual convention of Victoria, to be held in November, is anxiously awaited. The superintendents are busy preparing reports.

The W. C. T. U. was successful in obtaining the right to have a luncheon and tea booth at the agricultural show, Melbourne. The marquee was very attractive, being decorated with flags, art muslin, grasses and flowers. There were numbers of willing helpers. Adjoining the refreshment booth was a smaller marquee, fitted up as a kitchen, where scones and small cakes were baked and greatly appreciated.

Bendigo, a city one hundred miles from Melbourne, also obtained an afternoon tea booth, and followed the example set by the Melbourne sisters. Their marquee was tastefully decorated with art muslin and flowers. Twenty-five hundred scones were baked on the ground which was a great attraction. Tea, coffee, milk, flour, butter, etc., were donated by different business firms. An article in the daily paper read thus: "The W. C. T. U. booth was a great boon to visitors at the show," also, "A draw from alcohol to tea." Members of the Y's lent a helping hand with the baking.

Women's franchise has occupied much attention during the past two months. The bill for granting franchise to women was passed by the assembly, but rejected by the legislative council, although a large deputation waited upon them, and asked for their support. Resolutions have been passed condemning their action.

Loyal Temperance Legions are making strides. One new recruit the first month sold nine copies of The White Ribbon Signal, and has now increased her number to twenty-one.

Ballarat members are up and doing, and are using every effort to get their city council to pass a curfew law. We hope that other city councils will follow. Bendigo W's and Y's have with other temperance bodies, sent petitions to the city council protesting against the bowling club having a permit to sell drink in Rosalind Park.

Louisiana.

THE state executive committee held a meeting in New Orleans on December 16. It was decided to hold the next annual convention at Crowley, Acadia parish, in April. Arrangements were made to secure two of the prominent National organizers, Mrs. Ada Unruh and Mrs. Callie Howe, to lecture and organize throughout the state during January and February.

Mrs. Delia T. Clingman, of Homer, who was appointed state superintendent of mercy, has been unable to attend to the duties of this department, which is to be regretted. The trapping of birds, especially mocking-birds, and the brilliant red birds for sale, should cause everyone who loves our feathered friends to cry aloud against this evil. Every bird sold means a large number destroyed, as they are usually caught in the spring during the nesting season. The effect is already seen in a diminution of the number of birds. Maurice Thompson has noted the extinction of some species of birds along the Gulf coast in the vicinity of Bay Saint Louis.

The union at Homer, Claiborne parish, has enjoyed a visit from the president, Mrs. Wilson, of Monroe. She delivered a lecture entitled "Womanhood," and impressed all who heard her with her zeal and enthusiasm for the cause.

Miss Mary C. Walker, state superintendent of Sunday-school work, has returned to her Southern home for the winter, and is engaged in getting up a Christmas entertainment in connection with the Sunday-school at Baldwin.

The energies of the ladies at Berwick union have been directed toward securing a W. C. T. U. hall and reading-room, which it is hoped will be ready to occupy by Christmas.

Southern California.

VERY little has been heard this fall of unions just getting to work after their summer vacation, for there has been fewer rests from labor. Seldom have our workers accomplished so much during the heated term.

Los Angeles unions continue to feel the good results of Major Hilton's lectures. The Los Angeles union leads off with an active membership of 121, of which seventy-five active and twenty honorary have joined since July 1. Pomona has 120 and Los Angeles Central 121 active members. University union gained sixty, while others did nearly as well. Major Hilton lectured in Los Angeles and vicinity during the warmest months of summer, when many would have said no work could be done. County president Mrs. Lucy S. Blanchard, planned his route and made success possible. In every case the receipts exceeded all expenses, left money in the treasury, an increased membership and fresh interest in the cause.

Mrs. Blanchard is now trying the new plan of forming the membership of her union into neighborhood circles of twenty each. These circles elect their officers, adopt special departments of the union's work for their labors, but do not hold regular meetings like the union. The president of the circle is expected to preside at the meeting of the union occasionally and have her superintendents present their department work. The circle secretary sees that invitations, circulars, etc., from the union are sent to all the members, while the treasurer collects the dues from the circle members and gives them to the union treasurer. The principal idea is to train officers for future positions.

Another work fraught with great good has been the local school of methods, held each month by the officers of Los Angeles county. San Fernando, Lordsburg, Azusa and Covina are among the towns so blessed. Mrs. Lucy S. Blanchard, county president, has attended them all, and her deep earnestness makes a lasting impression. Mrs. Hester T. Griffith has kept her department of soldiers and sailors well before the people, pleading for their deliverance from the canteen curse. She has also presented the subject of mothers' meetings to many audiences, reading one paper thereon to eighteen different audiences. At the small town of Azusa one hundred ladies attended the all-day meeting and listened to Mrs. Griffith and other speakers.

Mrs. Jennie Bowlesby, matron of our Ransom Industrial Home, has returned from a brief vacation, during which she addressed a meeting at San Pedro upon the work of the home. For some time the girls of the home have been busy making fancy articles, which they are selling for the holidays, and a part of the profits of which will be given them. As many of the girls come into the home with no knowledge of work, it means much when they are capable of making articles that can be sold. Practical as well as fancy work is taught them, and when they leave the home they are fitted to earn an honest living and forearmed against temptation by an experimental knowledge of God's power to save and keep. December 7 the home gave a public reception, when many persons attended to learn more about the good done there. The board of managers and Mother Ransom acted as reception committee. Light refreshments were served, and many articles of the girls' work were sold.

Ours has not been a bloody field, though a warmly contested one, during the recent election. In San Diego county a union of temperance forces began the work some months ago, but a few discouraged hearts hindered their efforts, so the gain for the temperance cause has been chiefly in securing "clean" men on the old tickets—the cleanest ever elected, it is said. Riverside stood true to her defense of the home, and retained the prohibition law, while only fourteen votes stood between license and no-license in Ventura county, but to the praise of the Lord of hosts, those fourteen were on the side of temperance. Upon the supervisors now rests the responsibility of making a prohibitory law.

Kern county's progressive and aggressive president, Mrs. Henrietta Pomfret Anderson, has found time for plans for her field of hard labors, and after a tour into the mountains, and the organization of a live union at Glennville, she returned home to secure the services of our state organizer, Mrs. Mary G. Tongier, and they together sowed temperance seed through that sparsely settled country. Mrs. Tongier spoke at Delano, Famosa, Bakersfield, Panama and Glennsville—the latter place, up in the mountains and far from any other settlement.

Glennville was reached at dark after a second day's travel, but a live meeting was held and four members secured. In the thirteen days she traveled 740 miles, gave five evening and four afternoon addresses, and secured thirteen active and two honorary members. But figures can not tell of the encouragement, strength and sympathy her presence gave to the brave workers in that difficult field. Mrs. Tongier also assisted in Ventura county campaign when no-license carried.

Mrs. E. T. Scott has a strong hold upon the work in San Bernardino county, of which she is president. Her special labors began by the formation of a Y at Redlands, October 21, the former one having vanished. She then held from four to six meetings each in Cucamonga, Rialto, Etiwanda and Highlands, and will continue throughout her territory. In every case the meetings were successful, with large audiences and much interest, showing that favorable sentiment was created. In all thirty active members were secured.

Miss May Barbour, National evangelist, has delivered many lectures before unions and church societies in Los Angeles and Ventura counties.

The Y's of Los Angeles continue their monthly socials at the homes of friends. These occasions afford opportunities of securing new members, especially honoraries, of which there are now in the society twice as many as active members. As this Y uses the triple pledge it means much in these days of cigaret using, for young men to join.

The state Sunday-school convention was held in Los Angeles, November 25-27, when our cause was represented by state vice-president, Mrs. Emma Cash, who gave a paper on "The Worm of the Still at the Root of our Plants." So highly appreciated were her efforts that she has been invited to give the address in a number of churches. The International Sunday-school Quarterly Temperance Lesson was approved and the petition indorsed asking its continuance.

Blessings of honor have come to the state union in unusual number this year. To be represented in the National Convention by three leaders from the far southwest corner of the nation is certainly worth recounting. State president, Mary A. Kenney, state recording secretary, Mrs. Elizabeth H. Mills, and Mrs. E. M. McLeod, state superintendent of railroad work, carried our greetings and sympathy to the Crusade Convention, and bore our honors in benefit night. In addition we gained a prize banner for largest increase of membership among the group of states to which we were assigned.

Upon the return of state president, Mrs. Kenney, from the National Convention, the Los Angeles union of unions gave the state executive a public reception December 2, in Y. M. C. A. hall, our Temple being engaged. Mrs. Griffith gave the welcome, two beautiful solos were rendered, a poem by Mrs. H. P. Anderson, of Kern county, written for the occasion, was read by the state secretary, and then Mrs. Kenney delighted the audience with "Echoes from the National Convention," made so vivid as to be fully enjoyed. The following Sunday a state rally was held in the beautiful First Presbyterian church, when Mrs. E. T. Scott and Mrs. Mary G. Tongier, our state organizers, gave addresses upon our work. Prof. R. N. Jeffery, Mrs. J. B. Brown and Miss Jessie Goodwin, furnished the vocal music, while Miss Amelia Brown kindly gave her services at the organ.

The above meetings with a two days' executive we count at least as one long step in advance.

NOVEMBER 8 Mystic union gave a silver medal contest. Six young girls were the competitors. The recitations were all taken from the W. C. T. U. educators, and were very nicely rendered. A musical program was arranged, and the evening greatly appreciated by a small audience. The medal was awarded to Miss Emma Lamb.

Although the following is over two months old, I send it, as it should have found a place in my last letter, but was crowded out. Miss Willard's birthday anniversary was commemorated by the W. C. T. U. of Milford, at the home of its president. Flowers in all the gorgeous autumn tints decorated the rooms, particularly the easel on which stood a fine portrait of Miss Willard. Members of the union participated in the program and served the refreshments. Two members furnished original papers on Miss Willard's life; the president gave personal reminiscences. Songs were sung, and recitations by young girls added to the pleasure and variety of the evening.

A "no-license campaign" was the subject of discussion, and two thousand no-license ballots, given out to be distributed to voters on election morning. Several ladies volunteered to be at the polls at six A. M. The Connecticut Citizen, an earnest little temperance paper, was also produced, to be given to the voters before election. The gathering was large, earnest and enthusiastic.

Since the last report from Pawcatuck, that union has entertained the New London county convention, a very interesting and active meeting. In the evening they had the pleasure of listening to Mrs. J. K. Barney. The day following the convention the union took an excursion by boat to Saybrook. In September the ladies of the union worked with untiring energy for no-license. They distributed 13,791 pages of literature, going from house to house. On election day four white-ribboners were at the polls all day, giving out no-license ballots. In the evening the union had a dime supper for the accommodation of those waiting for election returns. They felt well repaid for all the hard work, for the town went no-license by a large majority.

The 13th and 14th of the present month the New London union held their long talked of and long worked for bazaar, for which they issued attractive invitations. A variety of useful and ornamental articles were on sale, and quite a snug sum realized for much needed local work.

GENTRY county unions had a successful conference November 26 and 27. Five unions were represented. The people and pastors gave them a royal welcome. Miss Lillian Wood gave two excellent addresses. Prof. Samuel Jordan, of the Stranberry Normal school, gave a scientific address on the effects of alcohol on the human system.

A silver medal contest was held on the first evening, Miss Orra Butler, of Darlington, receiving the medal. The success of the entertainment was largely due to Mrs. Alta Stevens, county organizer, who worked so faithfully to make the arrangements perfect, and she also sent reports of the meeting to seven different papers, which is a good hint to all our press superintendents.

The Pineville union held a Thanksgiving meeting. A good program was rendered, among other good things being an address by Rev. Sapp, who spoke of the blessings of 1898 and also spoke of the saintly life of Miss Willard. A large audience was present.

Empire Prairie union held a "Baby" contest some time ago, five little girls being the contestants. The medal was won by Blanche Manley; second prize went to Estie Sherman. There were also one-minute speeches by the active and honorary members of the union, and with good music made a pleasant evening's entertainment.

thought a new reporter had been appointed and I just sent the letters to her. By the time everything was made straight it was too late to get them in. I mention letters received from the Berlin, Eldon and other unions, the conventions of the fifth and second districts. I hope you will forgive me this time.

The fourth district of Missouri is very proud of being the banner district of the nation in medal contests. Missouri was proud, too, of carrying off the banners for Sunday-school and medal contests and also the star for press work. As press superintendent who had the best state report I feel highly honored to know God used me so successfully. If any of you state press superintendents happen around here, I will be very glad to show you the star and sing you my new song, "Star of Bethany."

Loyal Temperance Legion.

OUTLINE OF WORK FOR 1899.

1. Earnest effort to make effective the plans previously adopted for the junior, senior and normal grades, the study and reading courses, increasing the subscription list of The Young Crusader, and securing of honorary members; the celebration of special days, particularly of Miss Willard's birthday (September 28) as a harvest home, and of July 4, in the true spirit of patriotism; also the following new plans adopted by the L. T. L. conferences held in connection with the recent National Convention at St. Paul.

2. Dues, state and National. All Legioners who pay five cents for state and five cents for National dues will be counted as honor members. Each local superintendent is requested to keep an honor roll hanging in the meeting place of the Legion, upon which shall be written the name of each member as he pays his dues. On this roll, opposite the names, should be ruled two columns, one headed "National," the other "State." Each Legioner may be allowed to affix a star opposite his name in each column when he pays his dues. Small gilt stars can be bought very cheaply by the box at a stationers; Each local superintendent will be ready at the close of the year to report her number of honor members in addition to the total enrolled and pledge membership. Only pledged members are requested to pay dues. Each Legioner should be asked to save from his candy money, or earn, the required amount, keeping a temperance box in which the pennies shall be deposited until the whole sum is secured. If any superintendent is persuaded that her children have no candy money from which to save, and that they have no opportunity to earn the required amount, let her, in order that her Legion may come into line with the others, make special plans; it is suggested that she arrange an entertainment and give the children opportunity to earn the necessary amount by selling tickets. It is earnestly requested that each local superintendent make the securing of these dues the first financial work of the year, and that raising money for benevolences be taken up after this is accomplished.

3. The infant grade of the L. T. L., in which we desire to enroll all children from their birth to six years of age, when they will be ready to pass into the Junior L. T. L. This missing link being supplied the white-ribbon army will include in its membership a continuous chain, from the cradle to the grave, as was expressed by Mrs. Evelyn Riddle Huston, president of Clinton county, (Pa.) W. C. T. U., who brought this plan before the conference. The mothers of these little recruits, who may wear as a badge a bow of blue ribbon, are not to be asked to obligate themselves in any way, but only to pay an annual enrolling fee of ten cents, which is to be used as follows: six cents to be retained in the local treasury, as a special fund, for the purchase of enrolling cards and of the most helpful home literature to be kept in constant circulation among the mothers of these infant members; four cents to be divided equally between state and National W. C. T. U. treasuries, as L. T. L. membership dues. It is hoped that many mothers not now in the W. C. T. U. will be, through this plan, brought into our ranks. At least once a year the L. T. L. should hold a Rally Day for its infant grade members and their mothers. We can conceive of no good reason that can be given by any union for refusing to adopt this division of the L. T. L., even if it fails to carry on the other divisions. Each union in the country will be asked at the close of this year to report whether it has carried on the normal and infant grades of the L. T. L., both of which will, we believe, be found a help to its own immediate work as well as to that of the Legion.

4. The celebration of July 21, the birthday of Miss Anna Gordon, which was, by the Convention, added to the list of red-letter days with the title of L. T. L. Membership Day.

5. Special attention to our L. T. L. room in the Frances E. Willard National Temperance Hospital and to the missionary fund of The Young Crusader, which were, by vote of the conference, made the special objects of L. T. L. contributions for the coming year.

NOTES.

It is expected that the W. T. P. A. will be able to prepare receipt cards and enrolling cards for the plans set forth in paragraphs 2 and 3. Watch for advertisements of these, but do not wait to secure them before beginning the work.

The program arranged by Miss Gordon for the children's hour of the Convention and printed under her direction, was attractive in appearance and most beautiful in its subject matter, which included Miss Willard's own songs and recitations, given by the boys and girls representing the Sabbath-school and L. T. L. departments.

The children's mass-meeting on the Convention Sabbath, in addition to greetings and brief addresses from World's, National and state Sabbath-school and L. T. L. workers, had a delightful address on "Birds," by Mrs. Mary C. Upham, president of Wisconsin W. C. T. U.

Anna Gordon buttons were eagerly bought at the L. T. L. conferences, and will be proudly worn by our Legioners everywhere. They can be procured from the W. T. P. A. at ten cents each.

Mrs. Elma M. Preston, L. T. L. secretary of Pennsylvania, was made a W. C. T. U. life member by her Legions during the Convention.

Our prayers will follow our National organizer, Mrs. Addie N. Fields, as she goes (December 15) to Bermuda to enter upon the difficult undertaking of introducing the W. C. T. U. and L. T. L. into that island.

Sample copies of the souvenir report of New York state L. T. L. and of New Jersey's bright L. T. L. paper, The Helper (Miss Alice M. Guernsey, editor), were brought to the notice of the conference, and were greatly appreciated. Copies of The Helper were given to all.

Most people appreciate a good thing at a fair price, but some few will only have the things that cost the most money.

The Ivory is the favorite soap of most people. Some few want the high-priced toilet soaps and think they must be better because they cost more. No soap is more carefully made, or is made of better materials, than Ivory Soap.

A WORD OF WARNING.—There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

Purity.

All persons interested in this important department of our work will please send their address to me as early as convenient and I will gladly send them my Plan of Work for this year, hoping we may soon have the wheels of this great reform in motion.

Your superintendent is extremely anxious to secure testimony from city and village officials in regard to the results of the curfew law wherever it has been in effect three months or more and will consider it a personal favor as well as a benefit to the department to receive from white-ribboners living in cities or villages where said law is in effect, such testimony or even the address of the mayor. Also please state how long your law has been in effect, how it was secured, and your opinion of it. We believe the curfew law will save thousands of children from the impurity and crime which results from street education. Please send this early, that a leaflet may be prepared from this testimony to aid others in securing the curfew law.

Praying for your earnest coöperation in this department, I am,

Sincerely yours,
(MRS.) HELEN L. BULLOCK,

Physical Culture.

Many requests have come to this department that some assistance be given those who have not the time to enter physical training classes, even if opportunity is at hand. We are glad to announce that the need is finally met. We can now furnish physical help for our busy, overtaxed women. Miss Mary A. Blood, principal of the Columbia School of Oratory, Chicago, has arranged sixty exercises in a six-page folder. These are easy to understand, can readily be executed, and require no apparatus. A brief time—immediately after rising and before retiring the most favorable—regularly and persistently devoted to some of these exercises, will relieve that "tired feeling" and create new vigor for the many demands upon every useful woman.

These exercises are grouped under the following heads: 1. To secure good standing position; 2. Sitting position; 3. Exercises for securing a good figure and giving buoyancy and elasticity; 4. To increase circulation; 5. Breathing exercises; 6. Exercises for remedying protruding shoulder blades; 7. Exercises for sleeplessness; 8. Going up stairs easily.

If you suffer indigestion and some of the evils attending this disorder, try these exercises rather than medicines, which are usually largely alcoholic.

If your blood is sluggish, and a dull pain in the head is unfitting you for work requiring thought and good judgment, take a daily dose of these simple exercises and you will soon forget that you have a head that can ache.

Are you wondering how the temperance problem will be finally settled, when so many of the people are not only debilitated, but on the verge of nerve exhaustion, and only too ready to accept a narcotizing prescription because they are not willing to suffer? Advise those about you to try these exercises prescribed to meet the needs of women who think they can not take time to rest and get well. You can safely promise that the result will be better health, and without doctor's bills.

This is the easiest and most reliable method for making total abstainers of those who think they must depend upon some mild stimulant (falsely so called), or a small flask of brandy for emergencies.

Three states, Illinois, Kansas and Colorado, have recently inaugurated the physical education department, with superintendents fully equipped for the work.

Ten cents will secure the folder and one copy each of the "Physical Culture Reading" and the "Suggestions for County and Local Superintendents," containing complete list of department literature. "Physical Exercises for Busy Women" (the folder) will be mailed to one address for 35 cents per one dozen copies. Send orders to me.

Form of Bequest.

I give and bequeath to "The Frances E. Willard National Temperance Hospital Association" the sum of (——) for the use of said institution absolutely.

DEAR SISTERS OF THE UNION SIGNAL:—It is with great pleasure that I present a characteristic letter from our great-hearted Dr. Boynton, who for so many years has stoutly advocated the cause of our Hospital and thoroughly believed in its total abstinence principles.

Yours in the love of our ever loyal organization,

(MRS.) MARGARET INGLEHART.

"I was asked a few days ago to write a paper on the "Prophetic Outlook of the Temperance Hospital," but you know the habit that a doctor has of saying he 'hasn't time.' I actually have not had the time. It is said that a good pilot on the river observes the rear or stern of the vessel as well as the fore part. So, in our little talk, we will be retrospective as well as prospective. For many years I have had little sympathy with the use of alcohol. Sometimes I get into what doctors might call a 'sweatbox.' People will call in a doctor, and after a while, not being satisfied with the progress, they will say, 'Can't you give a stimulant, doctor?' and often will insist upon it. It puts a doctor in a pretty tight place, but when a man predicates his theories upon science, he can afford to resist the appeal.

"I recall such men as Sir Isaac Newton and John Locke, who were radical temperance advocates. They were considered fanatics, but the influence of their lives has pushed its way into the ranks of thinking people, and from them has come what you and I see to-day. We cannot always judge of the validity of a thing by its size or bulk. One day the people of Boston would have hung William Lloyd Garrison for his antislavery principles, but his friends released him, and he lived to see the amendment abolishing slavery added to our code of laws. After that he said: 'My work is done.' We have before us a more vital question than that of slavery. The object we have is to break the bonds that hold in slavery millions of men. While Garrison fought for four millions, we have millions and billions on our list.

"When Henry Clay reached the summit of the mountains by the Hudson, he stepped from the carriage, and stooping over, laid his ear to the ground. His driver asked him what he was doing. He replied, 'I hear the tramp of millions on the other side of the Hudson. I see the western prairies dotted all over with hamlets and towns and villages.' He could see with the eyes of prophecy this country of ours peopled with hundreds and thousands in city and town. So I can see the time when it will be shamefully embarrassing for a physician to prescribe liquor in any form.

"I am connected with a little college in the city. When I went there, there were several men of the faculty who would occasionally use liquor. When they invited me to drink with them, I replied that if they did not give up the custom of going out to take an occasional drink, I would leave the faculty. We have persuaded, and cut down, and weeded out, until to-day there is not a man on our faculty who will prescribe liquor, or use it, in any form whatever. We tell our students that when they go out to fight and contest and wrestle with disease, they must take with them remedies which do not contain alcohol, such remedies as shall build up the system rather than waste its tissues.

"Chicago is noted for many things. Extremes meet here. I have learned this important fact, namely, that the best class of thinkers, men of the best intellectual gauge, are those who are doing away with this miserable and unscientific practice of giving liquor, and I want to say to you W. C. T. U. women that if you unfurl to the breezes the flag of unconditional, uncompromising enmity to the use of liquor in any form, or for any purpose, you will draw to your aid the better class of men. I anticipate a time when it will be very unpopular to prescribe liquor. I remember once, twenty-four years ago, when I called on a clergyman in a southern city. He had the servant bring a large decanter, a couple of glasses and some cigars. When I declined to partake, he asked if I did not drink. I told him 'No.' Then if I did not smoke; and again I answered no, and repeated to him these words:

"Pledged together to Christ I come,
Free from tobacco, profanity and rum,"

"To-day you will see buffets and dining-rooms that would blush at the presence of liquor. The best and most highly educated people of to-day would no more have a decanter of wine in their house than a mad dog. The gentlemen before named would not compromise to the least extent. They would not use a particle of liquor. They said, if much is poison, little is poison, and it does not do to trifle with poisoned matter.

"You, ladies of the Temperance Hospital, have had a hard time of it, but I tell you, stick by the old rule, stand by each other, and the day may come when temperance will wonderfully control these large hospitals. We will work to that end.

"JOHN R. BOYNTON, M. D."

Where Our Speakers Are.

Mrs. E. Norine Law will be in or near Chicago the middle of January and she can take half a dozen appointments in that locality. Do not wait until it is too late, but address her in regard to terms and time, at 1152 14th Ave., Detroit, Mich.

To the Local Unions.

As the new year draws near, and earnest temperance workers are making plans for the future, we do most urgently request that the local unions throughout the country will make a special New Year's offering to the work of the W. C. T. U. by sending in the names of five new subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL, thus making it possible for the paper to reach many poor women who do not feel able to take it, but who are members of the organization, and who, by being well informed, would become valuable and intelligent workers. Will not each local president give this subject prayerful consideration, and devise some practical and effective method for giving to these needy white-ribboners the pleasure of reading the official organ during the year 1899?

The British Temperance Advocate says, in a recent issue: "THE UNION SIGNAL is a paper that cannot fail to influence public opinion for righteousness. We wish every woman could read it." Is not the great and crying need for intelligent workers, and who can estimate the amount of good that can be accomplished by placing THE UNION SIGNAL in the hands of each member of the National W. C. T. U.? With cordial holiday greetings,

Yours sincerely,
CAROLINE F. GROW,
Business Manager W. T. P. A.

Christmas Thoughts.

I wonder how many mothers have tried to catch, or teach the kindergarten idea in their preparations for this Christmas—the fact, that so few children, or even older people seem to feel or understand—the Christmas spirit means giving, not getting!

The little ones soon learn to look for Santa Claus, to write him letters, to make demands on his treasures, to look confidently to Christmas morning for a realization of their cherished hopes—for toy or book or sled or picture. How many parents look back to these tumultuous mornings, when children weary, with the anxiety of the night before, wake up at dawn in wild excitement, and scramble after the well filled stockings! What shouts of merry laughter, what a rush for the coveted playthings. What exploring for the mysteries in its depths till the bed is piled high and the floor is strewn everywhere. How many of the children stop to inquire what was in mamma's stocking, or who gave papa or auntie anything?

And how often a little later in the day, parents are disappointed in seeing what meager pleasure the little ones get from all their prodigality of riches. The reason is easy enough to see. They are overwhelmed with too much, and the selfish desire of possession is not the highest type of happiness.

The little children in all the kindergartens of the city have been busy for weeks making presents for mamma or papa or brother or sister; each one so engrossed with the little woven mat or the baskets, or the outline card, that it is very interesting to watch them. They illustrate the whole Frœbelian philosophy, that life to be worth living must be a life given to the service of others.

But when the children get into the graded school there is not much Frœbelian philosophy taught, after the primary grades. There is a scramble for class distinction, for the favor of the teacher, for prominence in position, and unless the home influence directly counteracts this insidious or aggressive element, the early lesson is soon eradicated.

It is just here where the mother should take up the thought of the kindergartner and carry it on into the future of the children.

The older children do not so often forget papa and mamma, but the half-grown ones are given money to buy what costs neither sacrifice nor effort on their part, or oftener shirk the obligation altogether, in their selfish eagerness to get something themselves, thus engendering the passion of avarice and forgetfulness of others, at an age so impressible for good influences.

When the children are older, father and mother wonder why they are so selfish, these products of their training, to think only of themselves; and then commences the work of teaching the true philosophy of human life and happiness, that it takes most of us all our lives to learn, and which should be taught at the mother's knee from infancy—that the gratification of our own selfish desires does not bring us happiness—but the giving to others, and the doing for others, is our hightest source of pleasure in every situation in life.

Mothers, teach the Christmas spirit of giving, until the passion for getting is absorbed into its purer desires.

Teach the story of the Christ Child in its fullest and tenderest meaning to the little ones who throng round you in the twilight at the children's hour. Talk of the fairy Santa Claus and his workshops, his wonderful generosity in scattering his gifts over the whole earth, but teach that his name is love. That the spirit of love is the spirit of the Christmas time. That back of every favor we each receive, is the one great divine heart beating for all, with ineffable love and desire for our best good.

Teach the children the life of the Christ Child was one of love and sacrifice, feeding the poor, healing the sick, forgiving the sinner, doing good for evil everywhere. That if we would emulate His life and win His love we must forget ourselves, our possessions, our things, and feel that love embraces all humanity.

Ask some unhappy friend to take dinner with you, and tell the children how especially kind they should be to the unfortunate or sorrowful.

Hunt up some poor boys and girls, they are not hard to find, all around us everywhere, and show the children how to give them pleasure. Fill their hearts and lives so full of the spirit of giving, they will cease to worry over the getting, or only think of it as a part of the impulse of the love of mankind, that the Christ should bring us every year.

LABOR OF LOVE: A Story for Boys. By Julia Magruder. 12mo, illustrated, 50 cts. Boston: Lothrop Publishing Company.

This little tale is bright, entertaining, and full of action, with something of the dramatic in its plot, and a good deal of the boy in its story. Boys and girls will all like it, for the girl in the story is quite as bright and active as the boy.

A LITTLE MAID OF CONCORD TOWN: A romance of the American Revolution. By Margaret Sidney, 1 vol., 12mo, illustrated by Frank T. Merrill. $1.50.

It is, as its sub-title indicates, "A romance of the American Revolution," and is the work of long study and research, and patient garnering of facts. Margaret Sidney in this her latest book has achieved a brilliant success, in which the American people will share, as it is a representative volume. Lothrop Publishing Company, 530 Atlantic avenue, Boston, Mass.

THE REMINISCENCES OF NEAL DOW is an octavo volume of nearly 800 pages which must prove of great interest to the friends of reform. It portrays scenes, incidents and events of well-nigh a century. It deals not only with personal and family affairs, with the growth and development of Maine, but with the Civil War, and much that transpired in other states and other countries, and is a clear and concise review of political events. The book is a valuable contribution to knowledge, and is such a handbook of the prohibition movement in Maine as has been desired for years. There are many illustrations, the print is large and the whole makeup is admirable. It should find a place in every private and public library in the country. The National Temperance Society, 3–5 West Eighteenth street, New York, is handling the book. Price, in fine cloth, design in gold on the cover, $2.50. Library style, calf, gilt top, $3.50. Half morocco, gilt top, $4.

MAKING HOME HAPPY, by Mrs. L. D. Avery-Stuttle. The author weaves an interesting story about the lives of a half dozen young people, which has for its foundation the relations of parents to children and the necessity for perfect love and confidence. The strength of the story is in its homeliness and practical application. The Review and Herald Publishing Company, Battle Creek, Mich.

THE TRUE STORY OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, the American statesman. By Elbridge S. Brooks. 1 vol., 4to, illustrated, $1.50. Boston: Lothrop Publishing Company.

The story of such a life—that of the most wonderful of all self-made Americans—told as this is told, never dry, never tedious, always brisk, bright, and magnetic, will do great good by introducing young Americans, and older ones, too, if they will but read the book, to one of the most remarkable characters in the world's history, America's best and brightest philosopher. The book is profusely and attractively illustrated.

AS IN A MIRROR. By Mrs. G. R. Alden ("Pansy"). 1 vol., 12mo, illustrated, $1.50. Boston: Lothrop Publishing Company.

This is one of Mrs. Alden's strong and searching stories of experience, based on common happenings in everyday homes, but brought so forcibly before the young men and women for whom the book is written, that they, even like the characters in the story, see themselves "as in a mirror," and say: "This might be my case," or "my duty." The story of Stuart King and Hildreth Elliott is peculiarly attractive, and cannot be otherwise than helpful to all who read it.

EIGHTY PLEASANT EVENINGS. Published by the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Boston and Chicago. 4½x6¾ inches: 117 pp. Cloth. Price 35 cents.

It is a book of social entertainments intended for young people's societies and church workers, Y. W. C. T. U. and similar temperance organizations, as well as for individual use. The Juniors, reading circles, and, in fact, nearly every organization giving evening entertainments (and what one does not?) are all remembered. One of the unique features of the book is, that each one of the eighty socials forms a complete program in itself for an evening's entertainment. The suggestions are for the most part tried and proved successes, and, what is of equal importance, nearly all are entirely new.

CATARRH OF THE STOMACH.

A Pleasant, Simple, but Safe and Effectual Cure for It.

Catarrh of the stomach has long been considered the next thing to incurable. The usual symptoms are a full or bloating sensation after eating, accompanied sometimes with sour or watery risings, a formation of gases, causing pressure on the heart and lungs, and difficult breathing; headaches, fickle appetite, nervousness and a general played out, languid feeling.

There is often a foul taste in the mouth, coated tongue, and if the interior of the stomach could be seen it would show a slimy, inflamed condition.

The cure for this common and obstinate trouble is found in a treatment which causes the food to be readily, thoroughly digested before it has time to ferment and irritate the delicate mucous surfaces of the stomach. To secure a prompt and healthy digestion is the one necessary thing to do, and when normal digestion is secured the catarrhal condition will have disappeared.

According to Dr. Harlandson the safest and best treatment is to use, after each meal, a tablet composed of Diastase, Aseptic Pepsin, a little Nux, Golden Seal, and fruit acids. These tablets can now be found at all drug stores under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and not being a patent medicine can be used with perfect safety and assurance that healthy appetite and thorough digestion will follow their regular use after meals.

Mr. N. J. Booher, of 2710 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "Catarrh is a local condition, resulting from a neglected cold in the head, whereby the lining membrane of the nose becomes inflamed and the poisonous discharge therefrom passing backward into the throat, reaches the stomach, thus producing catarrh of the stomach. Medical authorities prescribed for me for three years for catarrh of stomach without cure; but to-day I am the happiest of men after using only one box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I can not find appropriate words to express my good feeling. I have found flesh, appetite and sound rest from their use."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest preparation as well as the simplest and most convenient remedy for any form of indigestion, catarrh of stomach, biliousness, sour stomach, heartburn and bloating after meals.

Send for little book mailed free on stomach troubles, by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. The tablets can be found at all drug stores.

Publisher's Notes.

Philanthropy Fund.

Some weeks since we printed in THE UNION SIGNAL a letter from a faithful white-ribboner to whom many sorrows had come and who felt that she must give up her beloved paper. In response to this money has been received to continue her subscription, and we feel confident that some one will be interested in the following, and will supply us with money for the philanthropy fund, which enables us to meet just such deserving cases. The letter is from New York and is as follows:

"DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—For many years you have been a comfort to me, as well as to my mother during her lifetime, but I find it impossible to raise the dollar this coming year. I can not now see how I am able to provide food and clothing for my little ones, since I am left alone and all depends on my efforts."

The Frances Townsley Calendar for 1899 was ready early in November. It is composed of a sentiment for each day in the coming year, the material being garnered at the request of friends from Rev. Miss Townsley's sermons, lectures, and addresses, with a few entire poems of the author published in such standard publications as The Youth's Companion, the New York Independent, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Baptist Standard, etc. Miss Townsley is a National evangelist of the W. C. T. U. and at present is pastor of the Baptist church, of Vassar, Mich. The calendar is gotten up on neat paper with clear type, arranged for daily use, and the proceeds are to be devoted to Christian and reform work. There are many suggestions to young men and maidens; some to the aged, and not a few have felt that the preparation of this souvenir might be a means of real good to those who shall own a copy. It is expressly suitable as a Christmas gift. Orders will be filled after December 28 for fifty cents.

In response to a general demand the souvenir edition of Miss Willard's last address at Buffalo, 1897, has been printed. If you have read it with care it is needless to urge you to aid in its general distribution. Price 10 cents.

Dr. Mary Wood-Allen Receives a Letter.

I read the New Crusade every month with the greatest interest. I am the mother of six children, all under ten years of age, and I am spending my life teaching them how to live. I find much that helps me in your paper. I realize that the training of a child embraces so much. The home influence, the food, the dress, the sleeping room, the reading, the playing, etc., etc. There is no end to it. You are engaged in a grand work. Clean hearts, clean hands and clean lives for our children. I have learned much, I have still to learn. I tell others of the New Crusade, especially young mothers. I do not see how those mothers manage who have never looked into it at all. I have to be on the "lookout" all the time, danger is everywhere.

With prayer for your success,
Yours sincerely,
MRS. W. A. MCI.
